ALL THE

W O R K S

0 1

EPICTETUS,

WHICH ARE NOW EXTANT;

CONSISTING OF

His DISCOURSES, preserved by Arrian, In FOUR BOOKS,

The ENCHIRIDION, and FRAGMENTS.

Translated from the Original GREEK,

By ELIZABETH CARTER.

WITH

An Introduction, and Notes, by the Translator.

L O N D O N:

Printed by S. Richardson:

And Sold by A. MILLAR, in The Strand;

JOHN RIVINGTON, in St. Paul's Church-yard; And,

R. and J. DODSLEY, in Pall-mall;

M.DCCLVIII.

The TRANSLATOR of EPICTETUS owes the Permission of inferting the following ODE intirely to the Friend-ship of the Writer of it; who, when she favoured her with it, had no Thought of its ever appearing in Print.

An Irregular ODE.

To E. C. who had recommended to me the Stoic Philosophy, as productive of Fortitude, and who is going to publish a Translation of Efictetus.

1.

OME, EPICTETUS! Arm my Breaft
With thy impenetrable Steel,
No more the Wounds of Grief to feel,
Nor mourn by others' Woes depreft.
Oh teach my trembling Heart
To foon Affliction's Dart;
Teach me to mock the Tyrant Pain!
For fee around me fland
A dreadful murd rous Band,
I fly their cruel Power in vain!
Here lurks Diffemper's horrid Train,
And There the Pafflows lift their flaming Brands;
Thefe with fell Rage my helplefs Body tear, while Thefe with daring Hunds Against the immortal Soul their implous Weapons rear.

н.

Where-e'er I turn, fresh Evils meet my Eyes;
Sin, Sorrow, and Difgrace, Pursue the Human Race!
There on the Bed of Sickness Virtue lies!
See Priendship bleeding by the Sword
Of bate Ingratitude!
See baleful Jealouy intrude,
And poison all the Blis that Low had for'd!

[a 2]

Oh!

An IRREGULAR ODE.

Oh! feal my Ears against the piteous Cry
Of Innocence diftres!
Nor let me shrink, when Fancy's Eye
Beholds the guilty Wretch's Breast
Beneath the torturing Pincers heave:
Nor for the num'rous Wants of Mis'ry grieve,
Which all-disposing Heav'n denies me to relieve!

Ш

No longer let my fleeting Joys depend
On focial, or dometlic Ties!
Superior let my Spirit rife,
Nor in the gentle Counfels of a Friend,
Nor in the Smiles of Love, exped Delight:
But teach me in myfelf to find
Whate'er can pleafe or fill my Mind.
Let inward Beauty charm the mental Sight;
Let Godlike Reafon, beaming bright,
Chace far away each gloomy Shade,
Till Virtue's heav'nly Form difplay'd
Alone fhall captivate my Soul,
And her divinet Love poffes me whole!

IV. But, ah! what means this impious Pride, Which heav'nly Hofts deride! Within mylelf does Virtue dwell? Is all ferene, and beauteous there? What mean these chilling Damps of Fear? Tell me, Philosophy! Thou Boaster! Tell: This god-like all-fufficient Mind, Which, in its own Perfection bleft. Defies the Woes, or Malice of Mankind To shake its felf-possessing Rest, Is it not foul, weak, ignorant, and blind? Oh Man! from conscious Virtue's Praise Fall'n, fall'n! --- what Refuge can'ft thou find! What pitying Hand again will raife From native Earth thy groveling Frame! Ah, who will cleanfe thy Heart from Spot of finful Blame?

An IRREGULAR ODE.

v.

But, See! what fudden Glories from the Sky
To my benighted Soul appear,
And all the gloomy Prospect cheer?
What awful Form approaches nigh?
Awful: Yet mild as is the fouthern Wind
That gently bids the Foreft nod.
Hark! Thunder breaks the Air, and Angels speak!

Hark! Thunder breaks the Air, and Angels ipeak!

Behold the Saviour of the World! Behold the Lamb of God!"

Ye Sons of Pride, behold his Afpect meek!

The Tear of Pity on his Cheek!

The Tear of Pity on his Cheek! See in his Train appear Humility and Patience fweet, Repentance, proftrate at His facred Feet, Bedews with Tears, and wipes them with her flowing Hair!

171

What Scenes now meet my wond'ring Eyes!
What hallow'd Grave,
By mourning Maids attended round,
Attracks the Santoux's Steps? What heart-felt Wound
His spotels Boson heaves with tender Sighs?
Why weeps the Son belov'd, Omnipotent to fave?
But, 1o! He waves his awful Hand!
The sleeping Clay obeys His dread Command.
Ob Lazarus! come forth!——" Come forth and see "The dear Effects of wond'rous Love!
"He, at whose Word the Seas and Rocks remove,
"Thy Friend, thy Lord, thy Maker, weeps for Thee!

VII.

Thy Walls, "Serufalem, have feen thy King,
In Mecknefs clad, lament thy haplefs Fate!
Unquench'd His Love, though paid with ruthlefs Hate!
O loft, relentlefs Sion! Didft Thou know
Who thus vouchfafes thy Courts to tread,
What loud Hofimmas wouldft thou fing!
Nor fee unmov'd His kind paternal Woe!
Nor force His Tears, His precious Blood, for thee to flow!

An IRREGULAR ODE.

VIII.

No more repine, my coward Soul!
The Sorrows of Mankind to fhare,
Which He, who could the World controul,
Did not difdain to bear!
Check not the Flow of fweet fraternal Love,
By Heav'n's high King in Bounty given,
Thy flubborn Heart to foften and improve,
Thy earth-clad Spirit to refine,
And gradual raife to Love divine
And wing its foaring Flight to Heaven!

IX.

Nor Thou, Eliza, who from early Youth By Genius led, by Virtue traind, Haft fought the Fountain of eternal Truth, And each fair Spring of Knowlege drain'd; Nor Thou, with fond Chimeras vain, With Stoic Pride, and fancied Scorn Of human Feelings, human Pain, My feelle Soul fuftain! Far nobler Precepts should thy Page adorn. O rather guide me to the facred Source Of real Wisdom, real Force, Thy Life's unerring Rule!

To Thee, fair Truth her radiant Form unshrouds, Though, wrapp'd in thick impenetrable Clouds, She mock'd the Labours of the Greeian School.

LIST of Subscribers.

His Royal Highness The PRINCE of WALES. Her Royal Highness The PRINCESS DOWAGER of WALES.

Α,

IIIS Grace the Duke of Argyll, 2 Copies. Her Grace the Dutchefs of Argyll. Right Hon. Earl of Ashburnham. Right Rev. Lord Bishop of St. Asaph. Right Hon. Lord Anion. Right Hon. Lady Anfon. Right Hon. Richard Arundell, 2 Copies. Hon. Miss Allen.

Sir Jacob Aftley, of Melton Conftable, in Norfolk Hon. Baron Aguilar.

Miss Abel. Miss Adair, of Aldermanbury. Benjamin Adamson, E/q, Ephraim Aguilar, Esq; Jacob Albert, of Old Broad Street, E/q;

Rev. Dr. Allen, Subdean of the King's Chapel. Rev. Mr. Ashurst Allen. Rev. Mr. Allen, of Eastwick, Herts.

Lancelot Allgood, of Nantwick, Esq; Claudius Amyand, Efg; Commissioner of the Customs. George Amyand, Esq;

Thomas Anion, Efq; Mis Ashhurst. Rev. Mr. Ashton, Rector of St. Botolph's, Bishopsgate. Rev. Dr. Aftry, St. James's Place. Mr. Nathaniel Atkinfon.

Rev. Dr. Atwell. Rev. Dr. Ayerst, Prebendary of Canterbury.

Rev. Dr. Aylcough.

Most Hon. Marquis of Blandford, 2 Copies. Right Hon. Earl of Braidalbane. Right Hon. Earl of Bath. Right Hon. Lord Viscount Bolingbroke. Right Hon. and Right Rev. Lord James

Beauclerk, Bishop of Hereford. Right Hon. Lady Diana Beauclerk. Right Rev. Lord Bishop of Bangor. Right Rev. Lord Bishop of Bristol.

Right Hon. Lady Dowager Bateman, 2 Right Hon. Lord Bathurft.

Right Hon. Lord Berkeley, of Stratton. Hon. Robert Boyle. Hon. George Bridges Brudenell, Efg; Hon. Sir Henry Bellandine, Knight. Hon. Mrs. Boscawen.

Sir Hanson Berney, Bart. Sir Philip Boteler, Bart. Lady Bradshaigh. Rev. Sir William Bunbury, Bart.

Rev. Mr. Backhouse, Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge. Edmund Bacon, Efq;

Miss Bacon. Rev. Mr. Martin Bailey. Rev. Dr. Edward Ballard.

Miss Banks. Mr.s. Bargrave, of Cook's Court, Rev. Mr. Barker.

Rev. Dr. Barnard, Mafter of Eaton School. 7 Cofics.

Rev Mr. Barnard, of Luton. Mr. Barnard, of Holbourn Bridge.

LIST of Subscribers.

Rev. Mr. Barnardifton, Prefident of Benet Samuel Bowes, E/q; f Binfield. Rumfey Bowes, E/q; f Binfield. College, Cambridge. George Bowes, of Giblide, Co. Durham, Rev. Dr. Barton, Canon of Christ Church. William Bastard, Efq; Rev. Mr. Bates. Mrs. Eliz. Bowes, of Durham. Rev. Mr. Bowles, of Woodford. Mrs. Bathurft, of Lidney Park. Thomas Braddyll, E/q; Rev. Dr. Bearcroft, Mafter of the Charterhouse. Thomas Brand, Efq; F. R. S. Mrs. Beavis, of Hatton Garden. Rev. Dean Brandreth. Thomas Bray, Efq; Mi/s Charlotte Beckingham, of Kent. Mr. Beddingfield, of Dean's Yard. Mrs. Richard Briftowe. John Bell, Efq; Mrs. Mary Brockman. Rev. Mr. Belward. Mis Brooke. Rev. Mr. Bendyshe, of Duckleburgh, Isaac Hawkins Browne, Esq; 3 Copies. Norfolk, Charles Buckle, Efq; Rev. Mr. Stephen Buckle. Rev. Dr. Bentham, Canon of Christ Church, Oxford. Rev. Dr. Bullock, Dean of Norwich. Edward Bentham, of Tower Hill, Efq; James Burkin, E/q; Miss Bentley, of Deal, Kent. Edward Greene Burnaby, E/9; Rev. Mr. Berkeley. John Burrows, E/q; Mrs. Berkeley. Miss Burrows. Rev. Dr. Daniel Burton. John Berney, Efq. Rev. Dr. Thomas Burton, Archdeacon of Mrs. Berney. Rev. Mr. Berney, Rettor of Stokefby. St. Davids. Mrs. Berriman, Reliel of the late Rev. Dr. Rev. Dr. John Burton. Berriman. William Burton, of Clifford Street, E/q; Thomas Beft, of Chilston, Kent, Esq; Miss Burton, of Deal, Kent. Worshipful Dr. Bettefworth. Mr. Robert Buiton. Mr. Bigge, Gentleman Commoner of Christ Rev. Mr. Butler. Rev. Mr. Butler, of Andover. Church, Oxford. Mr. Biggs. Rev. Lr. Birch, F. R. S. 2 Copies. Robert Bird, of Aldermanbury, E/q; His Grace the Lord Archbishop of Canter-Rev. Dr. John Blair. 2 Copies. Right Hon. Earl of Corke and Orrery. Shovel Blackwood, of Charlton, Kent, Right Hon. Countess of Corke and Orrery. Rev. Mr. Bland, of Berkhamstead, Hertf. Right Hon Earl of Cardigan. Miss Bland, of Lombard Street. Right Hon. Countefs of Cardigan. Mijs Blomer, of Kent. Right Hon. Earl of Chesterfield. Nicolas Bonfoy, Efq; 3 of Ripton. Right Hon. Earl Cornwallis. Right Hon. Earl Cowper. Mrs. Bonfoy, The Book Society at Nottingham. Right Hon. Countefs of Coningfly. Rev. Mr. John Bofworth. Right Hon. Lady Anne Countess of Co-Rev. Mr. Bouchery, of Swaffham. ventry. Mi/s Bouverie. Right Hon. Lady Mary Capel. William Bowden, Efg; Right Hon. Lady Downger Carpenter.

Right Rev. Lord Bifhop of Carlifle. Right Rev. Lord Bishop of Chefter. Right Rev. Lord Bishop of Chichester. Right Rev. Lord Bishop of Clogher. Right Hon. Lord Carysfort. Right Hon. Lady Carysfort. Right Hon. Lord Cadogan. Right Hon. Lord Viscount Charlemont, 3 Copies. Right Hon, Lady Viscountess Conyngham. Right Hon. Lord Viscount Castlecomer. Right Hon. Lady Jane Coke. Right Hon. Sir Thomas Clarke, Master of the Rolls. Hon, and Rev. Dr. Cowper, Dean of Dur-6 Copies. ham, Hon. Mrs. Cowper. Sir John Croffe, Bart. Lady Curzon. Richard Owen, Cambridge, E/q; Pryse Campbell, Esq, Member for Inverness. Mrs. Carey. James Carter, of Devonshire Street, Esq; Mrs. Carter, of Canterbury. William Cartwright, of Aynho, Efq; Mr. Cater, of Coventry. Charles Cayley, Esq; Mi/s Kitty Chandler, Old Jury. Mr. John Channing. Mr. Chapone. Richard Chifwell, of Hackney, Efq; Mrs. Cholmley. Miss Cholmley, of Coleman Street. Mrs. Churchill, of Henbury, Dorfetshire. Mr. Churchill, of Blandford. William Churchill, of Mangreen, Efq; Rev. Mr. William Clagett. Worshipful Dr. Dennis Člarke. Samuel Clarke, Efq; Rev. Mr. Charles Clarke. Mrs. Clayton. Mrs. Clayton, of Fern Hill. Rev. Mr. Coham. Miss Annetta Coke, of Canterbury. Miss Cole. Mr. Coleman.

Rev. Mr. Colman, Fellow of Benet College, Cambridge. Worshipful Dr. Collier. Stephen Comyn, Efq; of the Chapter-house, Mrs. Comyn, St. Paul's. Mrs. Comyn, of Bedford Row. Rev. Mr. Cooke, Vicar of Edmonton. John Cooper, of Salifbury, Efq; Mr. Cooper. Mr. Cooper, Apothecary at Norwich. Mrs. Cope. Mrs. Corbet, of Charlton, Kent. Miss Corbet. Rev. Mr. Cott, Fellow of Benet College, Cambridge. Miss Cotten. Mrs. Frances Cotterell. Mrs. Hannah Coup, of Thames Street. Rev. Dr. Crane. Mr. Stafford Crane, of Salifbury Court. Rev. Dr. Creswick, Dean of Wells. Mrs. Croftes. Mr. John Crofts. Miss Anne Crosfield. Crow, Efq, of Norwich. Rev. Dr. Crufius. Rev. Mr. Curteis, Prebendary of Canterbury. Mrs. Cutts. His Grace the Duke of Dorset. Right Hon. Earl of Dartmouth. Right Hon. Lord Viscount Dupplin. Right Hon. Lord Dacre. Right Hon, Lord Delaware. Right Hon. Countefs of Dalkeith. Right Hon. Earl of Darlington. Right Hon. Countefs of Darlington. Right Rev. Lord Bifhop of St. Davids. Right Rev. Lord Bishop of Derry. Right Rev. Lord Biftop of Durham. IIon. Mrs. Digby. Sir Narborough Daeth, Bart. of Knowlton, Kent. Sir Brian Broughton Delves, Bart.

Sir William Dolben, Bart.

Lady

Lady Drake.	E.
Dack, M. D.	Right Hon. Earl of Egremont.
Rev. Dr. Dalton.	Right Hon. Countefs of Egremont.
Richard Dalton, E/q;	Right Hon. Lord Edgecumbe.
Mr. Richard Dalton.	Dight Hen I de Engeeninge.
	Right Hon. Lady Frances Elliot.
Dr. Dampier, of Eton.	Right Rev. Lord Bishop of Ely.
John Darby, Efq; Major in Col. Forbes	's Right Rev. Lord Bishop of Exeter.
Regiment.	Lady Dowager Ecklin.
Mrs. Eliz. Davison, of Durham.	Sir Henry Ecklin.
Capt. James D'Auvergne.	Mrs. Eaft, of Sackville Street.
Rev. Mr. Dawney, of Long Stratton.	Richard Edwards, Efq; Master in Chancery.
John Dawson, Esq;	Miss Edwards.
Miss Dawson.	Rev. Mr. Henry Egerton.
Miss Deane, of Jermyn Street.	Gilbert Elliott, Esq;
Mr. John Devayne.	Mrs. Elliott.
Miss Ellis Cornelia Deane, of Deal
Kent.	Pan Da Dan Tach Ellia
	Rev. Dr. Ben. Jof Ellis.
Rev. Mr. Degge.	Mrs. Ellis.
Dr. De la Cour.	Joseph Emin.
Rev. Dr. Delany, Dean of Down, 3 Copies.	William Emperor, of Book, Esq.
Mrs. Delany.	Richard Emmett, funior, E/q;
Mrs. Denew, of Canterbury.	John Errington, of Walwich Grange, Efq.
Day Da Days Auchdesen of Dochaffen	Coorse Eminator of Harman Acad To
Rev. Dr. Denne, Archdeacon of Rochester.
Mrs. Denne, of Maidstone, Kent.	Rev. Mr. Etough, Restor of Therfield.
Colonel Defaguliers.
Mrs. Dick, of Parliament Street.	F.
Dr. Dickens.	Right Hon. Lord Viscount Folkstone.
Edward Dickinson, Esq.	Right Hon. Lord Viscount Fitzmaurice, 2
Thomas Dinely, Efq;	Copies
1 Hornas Dilicity, Liq;
Mr. Philip Ditcher, of Bath.	Right Hon. Lord Feversham.
Mr. Dodfley, of Pallmall, 6 Copies.	Right Rev. Lord Bishop of Ferns.
Rev. Mr. Dodíworth.	Right Hon. Lady Viscountess Fitzwilliam.
Rev. Mr. Donne.	Right Hon. Lady Isabella Finch.
Mrs. Donnelan, of Charles Street.	Right Hon. Henry Fox, Efq;
Rev. Mr. Doughty, St. James's, Clerken-	The Hon. Mr. Forbes.
well.
	John Fane, Efq;
Mrs. Douglas, of Long Newton.	Miss Charlotte Fane.
Rev. Mr. Drake, of Milcham.	Mr. Farrer, of Doctors Commons.
John Drummond, Efq;	Rev. Dr. Fawcet.
Rev. Dr. Dumaresque, Fellow of Exeter	Mrs. Feilde, of Stansted Bury.
College, Oxford.	William Feilde, Efq;
Arnold Duncombe, of Stocks, Hertford-	Paul Failde EG
	Paul Feilde, Efq;
fhire, Efq;	William Fellows, of Shortisham, Norfolk,
William Duncombe, of Frith Street, Efq;	E[q;
Duncombe, Efq;	Rev. Mr. Dean Fetherstone.
Jeremiah Dyfon, Efq, Clerk to the Hon.	Rev. Mr. Forfter, Fellow of University
House of Commons.	College.
	David
	David

LIST of Subscribers.

Mrs. Goring.

David Findlay, E/q; Mrs. Flafby. Rev. Mr. Kobert Forrester. Mrs. Forth. Rev. Mr. John Foster, of Eaton. Frederic Frankland, E/q; Richard Frankland, Esq; Rev. Mr. Freeman. Rev. Dr. Freind, Canon of Christ Church, Thomas Fry, D. D. Prefident of St. John's College, Oxford. Robert Raikes Fulthorpe, Efq; Her Grace the Duchess of Grafton. Most Hon. Marchiones's Grey. Most Hon. Marchioness of Granby. Right Hon. Earl of Godolphin. Right Hon. Earl of Granville. Right Hon. Earl of Guildford. Right Hon. Countess Dowager Gower. Right Hon. Lady Charlotte Guernsey, now Countess of Ailsford. Right Hon. Lady Viscountess Gage. Right Rev. Lord Bishop of Gloucester. Right Hon. Lady Elizabeth Germain. Sir Richard Grofvenor, Bart. 6 Copies. Rev. Dr. Gally, Prebendary of Norwich. Mrs. Gambier, of Betshanger, Kent. Miss Gambier, of Buckingham Street. Mrs. Martha Gambier, of Gloucester Str. Mi/s Gardiner. Mrs. Anne Gee, of Red Lion Square. Rev. Dr. Gecky, Prebendary of Canterbury. Rev. Mr. Gellibrand, of Sandwich. Rev. Mr. Frederic Francis Giraud, Vicar of Westwell, Kent. Stephen Godin, of Old Broad Street, Efq; Francis Godolphin, Efq; William Man Godichall, Efq; Mrs. Godíchall. Rev. Mr. Gooch, Prebendary of Ely. Rev. Dr. Goodall, Prebendary of Norwich. Thomas Gordon, Efq. Commander of bis Majesty's Ship William and Anne. Miss Gordon of Tower Hill. Charles Gore, of Tring, Herts, Efq; Matthew Gofs, Esq; Mrs. Gould, of Lincoln's Inn Fields. Rev. Dr. Gower, Provoft of Worcester College. Miss Leveson Gower. Mrs. Graves. Mrs. Eliz. Gray, of New Broad Street. Rev. Dr. Green, Dean of Lincoln, 2 Copies. Miss Green. Rev. Dr. Gregory, Dean of Christ Church. Rev. Mr. Greet, Chaplain to the Bishop of Norwich. Rev. Mr. Gregg. Christopher Griffiths, E/q; Mr. Griffiths, Bookfeller, in Paternoster Row. Edward Grose, Esq; Samuel Grub, Efq; Mrs. Guerin. Mr. Joseph Guinand. Right Hon, Earl of Hardwicke. Right Hon. Earl Harcourt. Right Hon. Earl of Huntingdon. Right Hon. Lord Viscount Hatton. Right Hon. Lord Halifax, Right Hon. Lord Hyde. Right Hon. Lady Margaret Heathcote. Hon. and Rev. Mr. John Harley. Sir Edward Hales, of St. Stephen's, Kent. Bart.

Rigot reton. Lady Wangaret Treatment.

Hon, and Rev. Mr. John Harley.

Sr Edward Hales, of St. Stephen's, Kent.

Bar Hardes, of Hardres Court, Kent.

Lady Hon. George Hay, One of the Lords

Commillioners of the Admiralty. 2 Copies.

William Pierce Hall, Efg.

Henry Hall, of Hutton Hall, Effex, Efg.

Miff Hall, of Uptown, Efg.

Miff Elizabeth Hall.

Miff Hall, of Canterbury.

Mrs. Halley.

Rev. Dr. Hammond, Prebendary of Norwich.

[b 2]

Mrs.

LIST of Subscribers.

E/q;

Miss Howard. Edward Hulse, Esq;

Mrs. Hanger. Harbord Harbord, Esq; Nicolas Hardinge, Efq; Mifs Hardres, of Canterbury.
Joseph Hardy, of May Place, Kent, Efq; James Harris, of Salisbury, Efq; Rev. Mr. George Will am Harris. Miss Harwood. Mrs. Hawker, of Deal, Kent. John Hawkefworth, LL. D. Mrs. Hayes, of Auftin Fryars. Mrs. Hayley. Mr. George Hayter, Merchant. Rev. Dr. Head, Archdeacon of Canterbury. Gilbert Fleathcote, Efq; Rev. Mr. Heathcote. John Fleaton, Esq; Wilham Heberden, M. D. 6 Copies. Mis t lerbert. John Hervey, Esq; John Frederic Heffe, E/q; Rev. Mr. Hetherington, Fellow of Eton. Rev. Mr. Hey, Rellor of Wickambreux, Kent. Miss Heylin. Mis Heywood, of Austin Fryars. M./s Highmore. Miss -Thomas Hill, Efg; Charles Hinuber, Efq; Suffolk Street. Thomas l-litchcock, B. D. Fellow of St. John's, Oxford. Mrs. Floadley. Mrs. Hoblyn, of Nanfwydden, Cornwall. Rev. Mr. Hodge. Thomas Hollis, E/q; Rev. Mr. Holwell, Colonel Honywood. Mrs. Honywood. Rev. Dr. Hooper, Senior Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge. Edward Hooper, Ejq; Commissioner of the Richard Hopkins, of Oving, Bucks, Efq; Edward Hopfon, of Salifbury, Efg; Mrs. Horberry.

Rev. Mr. Humphreys. Rev. Dr. Hunt, Canon of Christ Church. William Huffey, of Salifbury, E/q; James Huftler, E/q; Rev. Mr. Dean Hutchinson. His Grace the Lord Primate of Irelandi. Right Hon, Lord Chancellor of Ireland. Right Hon. Lord Viscount Jocelyn. Right Hon. Lady Dowager Viscountes Irwin. Sir William Irby, Bart. Dr. John Jacob, of Salifbury. Robert Jackson, Esq; Rev. Mr. Matthias Jackson. Rev. Mr. James, Rector of Upper Deal, Kent. Rev. Dr. Ibbetion. Samuel Ibbetson, E/q; Capt. Jeffreys. Miss Anne Jeffreys. Charles Jenkinson, E/q; Miss Jeimey. Rev. Mr. Jones. Samuel Johnson, M. A. Rev. Dr. Jortin, Rev. Jos. Irons, B. D. Vicar of Linsted, Kent. Rev. Dr. Jubb. Mrs. Jubb, of Porters, Hertfordshire.

Right Hon. Lady Kingston.

Sir Francis Knollys, Bart.

Rev. Mr Kemp, of Brecon.

Mrs. Catherine Knapp.

Matthew Kenrick, Efq;

Anthony Keck, Efg;

Mis Knatchbull.

Right Rev. Lord Bifbop of Kildare.

Right Rev. Lord Bifliop of Killala.

Mr. Keating, of Warwick Lane.

John Horner, of Melles, Somerfetshire,

Thomas

2 Copies.

Thomas Knight, Esq., of Godmef-Thomas Knight, jun. Esq., and Godmef-Library of St. John's College, Cambridge. Library of St. John's College, Oxford. Library of Eton College, 2 Co. ham, Kent. Miss Knight. 2 Copies. John Knowler, of Canterbury, Efq; Library of Doctors Commons. Mrs. Kynaston. Guy Lloyd, Esq; Rev. Mr. Kynderley, of Norwich. Mrs. Lloyd. Rev. Mr. I.loyd, One of the Masters of Westminster School. Ifrael Long, Est; of Dunston, Norfolk, Mrs. Sarah Long, His Grace the Duke of Leeds. Right Hon. Earl of Leicester. Mr. George Love. Right Hon. Countefs of Leicester. Right Hon. Earl of Lincoln. Rev. Mr. Lowe, Canon of Windsor, Mrs. Lowe. Right Hon. Countefs of Lincoln, Mr. Charles Lowth. Right Hon. Earl of Litchfield. Mrs. Lowther. Right Hon. Earl of Londonderry. Miss Lowther. Right Hon. Lord Lyttleton, 2 Copies. Mrs. Ludby, of Jermyn Street. Henry Lyell, Efq; Right Rev. Lord Bishop of Landaff. Right Rev. Lord Bishop of Limeric, 2 Copies. Rev. Dr. Lynch, Dean of Canterbury. Right Rev. Lord Bishop of Lincoln. Mrs. Lynch, Right Rev. Lord Bishop of Litchfield. at the Deanry, Canter-Miss Lynch, Right Rev. Lord Bifhop of London. bury. Miss Sally Lynch, Right Hon. Sir George Lee. Right Hon. Henry Bilfon Legge, Efq; George Lynch, M. D. Robert Lynch. M. D. Hon. John Lindfay. Rev. Mr. George Lynch, Fellow of Benet Rev. Dr. Lamb, Dean of Peterborough. College, Cambridge. James Lamb, of Lincoln's Inn Fields, E/q; Miss Lyttelton. Mrs. Lamb. Mr. Langley, of New Broad Street. M. John Langlois, Efq; William Lawrence, Efq; His Grace the Duke of Marlborough. Her Grace the Duchefs of Marlborough. Daniel Peter Layard, M. D. Right Hon. Earl of Mucclesfield. Mr. Leake, junior, of Bath. Right Hon, Earl of Marchmont. Right Hon. Earl of Moreton. William Lee, Efq; Right Hon. Lord Mansfield. Mrs. Lee. Rev. Mr. Leech, of Intwood. Right Hon. Lord Milton. Mrs. Thomas Lees. Right Hon. Lord Ducie Morton. Mr. Baron Legge. Hon. and Rev. Dr. Henry Moor. Mrs. Le Heup, of Lincoln's Inn Fields. Hon. Mr. Mackenzie. Francis Leigh, of Havering Bower, Effex. Sir Henry Manwaring, Bart. Efq; Sir William Milner, Bart. Mrs. Leighton. Major Maccullough. Samuel Leffingham, of Hackney, Eff; Mrs. Malthy, of Queen Street. Miss Letch Mrs. Maltby, in the Poultry. Library of Trinity College, Henry Maningham, Efq; Rev. Dr. Man, Archdeacon of Dublin. Library of Benet College, Cambridge. Rev. Dr. Markham. Lib. ary of Caius College, Library of Jefus College, Mr. Jeremiah Markland.

Dr

Dr. Marriott, of Trinity Hall, Cambridge.	Francis Naylor, Ejq;
- Masham, of Stratton Strawley, E/q;	Mr. Neal, Indilian Book
Rev. Mr. William Mafon.	Mr. Neal, Million Bank.
Mrs. Masters, of Brook, Kent.	Henry Negus, Efq;
74. Marcella, by Blook, Rent
Mrs. Mary Mafters, of Norwich.	Mrs. Nefbitt.
Mrs. Matson, of Wingham, Kent.	Gabriel Neve, of the Inner Temple, Efq; 3
Mr. Matthews, Bookfeller, in Cambridge.	Copies.
Rev. Mr. Mence, Vicar of St. Pancras.	Robert New, E/q ;
Moles Mendez, E/q;	Rev. Dr. Newcombe, Dean of Rochester,
Mr. Rebecca Merret.	2. Copies.
Mr. Merrill, Bookfeller, in Cambridge.	Rev. Dr. Newcome, Prebendary of Wor-
Mr. John Middleton, Attorney, at Deal.	cefter.
Mildmay, E/q;	Rev. Dr. Newton, Prebendary of West-
Mrs. Mills, of Nackington, Kent.	minster.
Richard Mills, E/q;	Rev. Mr. Newton, Fellow of Jefus College,
Mrs. Mills, of Canterbury.	Cambridge.
Rev. Mr. Minet, Redor of Eythorn, Kent.	Rev. Dr. Niblet, Warden of All Souls, Oxford
Mr. Daniel Minet.
Rev. Mr. Miney.	Rev. Dr. Nicholls, Canon of Christ Church.
Rev. Mr. De Miffey.	Mrs. Nicholfon.
Miss Molineux.	Rev. Dr. Nicolls, Master of the Temple.
Monfey, M. D.	William Norris, of Norwich, E/q;
George Montagu, E/q;	John Norris, of Whitchingham, Efq.
Mrs. Montagu.	Mrs. Norris.
Rev. Dr. Morgan, Prebendary of Win-	Rev. Mr. Nut.
	100. 127. 14th,
chefter.	•
Robert Morgan, of Hurst, Efq;	О.
Mrs. Morris, of Peircefield.	Right Hon. Arthur Onflow, Efq;
Mrs. Morehall, of Diftaff Lane.	Right Rev. Lord Bishop of Oxford, 12
Rev. Dr. Moss, Restor of St. James's,	Copies.
Westminster.	Sir George Oxenden, Bart. of Dene, Kent,
Peter Muilman, Efq;	6 Copies.
	r . t. O t
Thomas Mulfo, junior, Efq;	Lady Oxenden.
Miss Mulfo.	Henry Oxenden, of Broome, Kent, Esq.
Nicolas Munckley, Efq;	2 Copies,
Rev. Dr. Mufgrove, Provoft of Oricl Col-	Mrs. Oxenden.
lege, Oxford.	Mr. Oakley, of Deal, Kent.
James Mytton, E/q;	Chaloner Ogle, Efq;
Junies 112/ 11011, 20/1,	Mrs. Ogle.
N.
	William Oliver, M. D.
His Grace the Duke of Newcastle.	Rev. Mr. Oram, Chaplain to the Bishop of
Her Grace the Duchefs of Newcastle.	Ely.
Right Hon. Earl of Northumberland.	Miss Elizabeth Osborne.
Right Rev. Lord Bifliop of Norwich, 4	•
Copies.	P.
Right Hon. Lord Newsham.	Her Grace the Duchefs of Portland.
Rov. Mr. Treadway Nafh.	Right Hon. Earl of Portimouth.
	Right

Right Hon. Earl of Plymouth. Right Hon. Countefs of Pembroke. Right Hon. Lord Viscount Palmerston. Right Hon. Lady Dowager Viscountess Palmerston. Right Hon, Lady Parker. Right Hon. Lord Viscount Powerscourt. Right Rev. Lord Bishop of Peterborough. Right Hon. William Pitt, Efq; Hon. George Lane Parker. Hon. Thomas Potter, E/q; Hon. Mrs. Pelham. Sir William Beauchamp Proctor, Bart. Rev. Mr. Paget, B. D. Restor of Wells, Somerfetshire. Mr. Joseph Paice. Mrs. Palmer, of Kent. Mrs. Papillon, junior, of Kent. Rev. Dr. Pardo, Principal of Jefus College, Oxford. Rev. Dr. William Parker. Mr. Paterson. Miss Paul. Mr. Thomas Payne, Bookfeller, in Castle Rev. Mr. Pearle, Minor Canon of St. Paul's. Worshipful Dr. Peck. Mr. Peck, Surgeon of the Hofpital at Deal. Mrs. Peckard, of Huntingdon. Rev. Mr. Pemberton, M. A. Student of Christ Church, Oxford. Miss Pennington, of Huntingdon. Mr. Pepper. John Peters, Efq; Charles Piers, of Chifelhampton, Efq; Rev. Mr. Pinckney, Vicar of Charing, Kent. Rev. Mr, Pinell, Restor of Eltham, Kent. - Pitcairne, M. D. Mrs. Plummer. Rev. Dr. Plumptre. Mr. Robert Pott, Merchant. Rev. Dr. Potter, Prebendary of Canterbury. Rev. Mr. Powlett. Mrs. Poyntz.

Rev. Mr. Price, of Afton Clinton, Bucks. Rev. Mr. Primatt. Rev. Dr. Primrofe. Edmund Probyn, Efg; of Newland. Mrs. Probyn. Miss Pulteney. Right Hon. Lord Ravensworth. Right Hon. Lord Romney. Right Hon. Lord Viscount Royston. Right Rev. Lord Bishop of Rochester. Sir William Robinson, Bart. Rev. Dr. Randolph, Prefident of C. C. C. and Vice chancellor of Oxford. Miss Randolph, Kent. Rev. Dr. Ratcliffe, Mafter of Pembroke College, Oxford. Jones Raymond, Efq; Henry Reade, Efq: Rev. Mr. Reyner, Subdean of St. Paul's. George Rice, Efq; Mr. Richardson. Mr. Richardson, of Salisbury Court. Mr. John Rivington, Bookfeller, 6 Copies. Rev. Dr. Robinson, Warden of Merton College, Oxford. George Bridges Rodney, Efq; Mrs. Rooke, of St. Lawrence, Kent. Rev. Mr. John Rotherham, of Queen's College, Oxford. Mrs. De Rouffel, of Canterbury. Mr. Theophilus Rowe, of Hampstead. George Ruck, of Jermyn Street, E/q; John Anthony Rucker, E/q; Mrs. Rudge. Nathaniel Ryder, E/q;

Her Grace the Duchefs of Somerfet,
Right Han. Earl of Shaftelbury.
Right Hon. Countifs of Shaftelbury.
Right Hon. Earl of Stanfield, 2 Copies.
Right Hon. Countifs of Stanford, Right Hon. Countifs of Stanford.
Right Hon. Countifs of Stanford.
Right Hon. Loads Jon Stort.

Right

IIST of Subscribers.

Right Hon. Lord Charles Spencer. Right Hen. Lady Diana Spencer, now Lady Rev. Dr. Richard Smallbrooke, Chancellor Bolingbroke. Right Hon. Lady Jane Stanhope. Mrs. Smith. Right Rev. Lord Bifliop of Salifbury. Hon. ____ Sandys, Efq; Hon. Afrs. Southwell. Hon. Charles Stanhope, Efq; Lady Salufbury. Thomas Smith, Efq, Admiral of the Blue. Richard Salter, Efg. Henry Pawlet St. John, Efq; Mrs. Spence. Mr. Edward St. Leger, of Deal. Joseph Salvador, Efg; Mrs. Sambroke, Berkley Square. Mrs. Stanley Mr. Joseph Sandford, of Baliol College, Oxf. Charles Savage, Esq; Miss Sawbridge, of Olontigh, Kent. Miss Catharine Sawbridge, Alexander Schomberg, Efq; Commander of bis Majesty's Sbip Diana. Mr. Stevens. George Lewis Scott, Efq; Miss Scott. Mrs. Stewart. Mrs. Scudamore. Rev. Mr. Secker. Mr. Walter Shairp, Merchant in St. Peters-Mr. Stracy. Rev. Dr. Sharp, Archdeacon of Northumberland. Rev. Dr. Gregory Sharpe. Rev. Mr. Thomas Sharp. lege. Rev. Mr. Shaw, Rettor of Wyberton. cester. John Shelley, Efq; Samuel Shepherd, E/q; of Mongeham, Rev. Dr. Shipley, Canon of Christ Church. Mr. Shirley, of Bartholomew Close. Alr. Simmonds, Attorney at Sandwich, Kent. Ales. Simpson, of Doctors Commons. Alrs. Simplon, of Litchfield. Joseph Simpson, Elg; P_T . Simplon, Alr. Simpson, Gen. Com. of Christ Church, Oxford Rev. Mr. Tho. Skinner, Bishopfgate Str.

Rev. Dr. Sleech, Provoft of Eaton. of Lincoln. Mrs. Smith, of Deal, Kent. Miss Smith, of Jermyn Street. Mr. Lilley Smith, of Coventry. Mr. Smith, Banker, at Nottingham. Mrs. Smythe, of Cuddefden, Oxfordshire, 2 Copies. Rev. Mr. Spence. John Spencer, E/q; 5 Copies. Edward Stanley, E/q; Mr. Edward Stanley. Rev. Dr. Stebbing. Joshua Steel, Esq; Dr. Stephens. Philip Stephens, Efq; Mi/s Stephens, of Deal, Kent. Mrs. Mary Stewart, of Dublin. Andrew Stone, Efq; Alexander Strahan, Efq; Richard Stratton, Efq; of Charlton, Kent. Mr. Suffield, of Norwich. Rev. Mr. Sumner, Fellow of King's Col-

Dr. Sutton, for the Book Society at Lei-Miss Isabella Sutton. Mrs. Mary Sweeting, of Basinghall Street. Mrs. Anne Swinburne, of Devonshire Str.

Red Lion Square. Rev. Mr. Swinden, of Greenwich, Kent.

His Grace the Lord Archbishop of Tuam. Right Hon. Earl Temple. Right Hon. Lord Talhot. Right Hon. Lady Talbot. Hon. George Townshend. Sir John Turner, Bart.

Lady

LIST of Subscribers.

Lady Turner. Henry Talbot, E/q; Right Hon. Lord Vere. Mrs. Talbot, at the Deanry of St. Paul's. Right Hon. Lady Vere. William Vangerstegen, Esq, Gen. Com. of Rev. Mr. Tapps, of Norwich. Thomas Tash, Esq. Commissioner of the St. John's College, Oxford. Miss Vanhattem. Mrs. Vanhemmert, of Broad Street. Rev. Mr. Tatton, Prebendary of Canter-Mr. James Vere, of Bishopsgate Street, bury. Merchant. Mr. Vernon, of Coventry. Mi/s Tatwell, of Ironmonger Lane. Rev. Dr. Taylor, Residentiary of St. Paul's. Mr. Edward Villers, of Coventry. Rev. Mr. Taylor, of Bifrons, Kent. Mrs. Taylor, of Bifrons, Kent. Robert Vincent, E/q; Mrs. Underdown, of Deal, Kent. Robert Taylor, M. D. John Upton, Esq; Mr. Upton. M. Teal, M. D. of Maidston, Kent. Mrs. Tempest, of Durham. Rev. Mr. Upton, Prebendary of Rochester. Rev. Mr. Territ. Rev. Mr. Robert Thistlethwayte. Right Hon. Earl of Winchelfea. Rev. Dr. Thomas. Rev. Dr. Thomas, Prebendary of West-Right Hon. Lord Wentworth. Right Hon. Lord Viscount Windsor. Rev. Mr. Thompson, Vicar of Reculver, Right Hon. Lord Walpole. Right Hon. Lord Weymouth. Kent. Rev. Dr. Thruston. Right Hon. Lord Willoughby of Parham. Mrs. Tidd, of Wells. Right Hon, Lord Willoughby de Broke. John Bladen Tinker, Efq; Commander of Right Hon. Lady Frances Williams. bis Majesty's Ship Dover. Rev. Mr. Toll, of Gregwell. Right Rev. Lord Bifbop of Waterford. Right Rev. Lord Bishop of Worcefter. Rev. Mr. Toll, Rellor of Dogmersfield. Hon. Mrs. Walter. Mr. Samuel Totton. Hon. Mrs. Wation Sir Randal Ward, Bart. Rev. Mr. William Totton. Sir Armine Wodehouse, Bart. Mr. Stephen Totton. Miss Lydia Touchet. by the Mansion-house. Rev. Dr. Walker, Vice Master of Trinity Horace Townshend, Ejq. College, Cambridge. Rev. Mr. Walker, of Spetifbury, Dorfetfh. George Trenchard, E/q; Mi/s Walker. John Trenchard, Esq, Mrs. Trevor. Worsbipful Dr. Wall. Mr. Bartholomew Wall, Student of Christ Mrs. Mary Trevor. Mrs. Tripp. Rev. Mr. Tuck. Church, Oxford. Rev. Dr. Walwyn, Prebendary of Canter-Rev. Dr. Tunftal, Vicar of Rochdale. bury. Rev. Dr. Warburton, Dean of Briftol. Mrs. Mary Turner. Edward Turnour, of Shillinglee Park, Suf-Miss Ward. fex, Efq; Mifs Ward, of Kenninghall, Norfolk. Lee Warner, of Walfingham Abby, Nor-Mrs. Turnpenny. folk, Esq; Mrs. Tyndall, of Doctors Commons. [c] Richard

Miss Wilkinson, of Broad Str. Buildings, Richard Warner, E/q; Mrs. Sarah Warren. Mrs. Williamson. Rev. Mr. Wastell, of Simondburn, North- Rev. Mr. Wills, Vicar of St. Bride's. Rev. Dr. Christopher Wilson, Prebendary berland. Miss Wastell. of Westminster. Samuel Wathen, M. D. William Wood, Efg, Secretary to the William Watfon, M. D. of Lincoln's Inn Cuftoms. Francis Wollaston, Esq. Fields. Lewis Way, Efq; Mrs. Wowen, of Hackney. Arthur Weaver. of Ravenscort, Esq, 2 Copies. Daniel Wray, Esq; Mrs. Wyatt, of Quekes, in the Ine of Rev. Dr. Webber, Dean of Hereford. James Weedon, D. D. Fellow of St. John's, Thanet, Kent. Mr. Wyborn, of Hull, near Deal. Oxford. Mil's Wyndlow, of York. Samuel Wegge, Efq; Rev. Mr. Welton. Hon. James West, Esq; His Grace the Lord Archbishop of York. Mrs. West. Mrs. Wheeler. Hon. Charles York, Sollicitor-General to Rev. Mr. Whiffon, Fellow of Trinity Colbis Majesty. Rev. Dr. Yarborough, Principal of Braz. lege, Cambridge. Mr. White, of Westminster. Mrs. Mary Whitmill. Nose College, Oxford. Miss Alice Yardley, of Coventry. Rev. Dr. Yonge, Residentiary of St. Paul's. Joseph Wilcox, Efq; Rev. Mr. Wilde, of Coventry. Rev. Dr. Young. Mr. James Wilde, of Hereford. Rev. Dr. Young, Restor of Welwyn. Robert Young, Efq; Mrs. Wilkes. Rev. Mr. Edward Yonge, M. A. Fellow Ifrael Wilkes, junior, Efq; amptonshire, E/q;

ADDITIONAL SUBSCRIBERS.

Right Hon. Earl of Powis. Right Hon. Countefs of Powis. Sir William Courtenay, Bart. Dr. Davies, of Bath.

James Wilkinson, of Bugbrooke, North-

Miss Sally Fulham, of Windsor. Mr. James Leake, of Bath. Charles Boothby Skrysmsher, Esq. Miss Thistlethwayte.

of King's College.

INTRODUCTION.

§. 1.

HE Stoic Sect was founded by Zeno, about three hundred Years before the Christian Æra: and flourished in great Reputation, till the Declension of the Roman Empire. A complete History of this Philosophy would be the Work of a large Volume: and nothing further is intended here, than fuch a fummary View of it, as may be of Use to give a clearer Notion of those Passages in Epictetus, a strict Professor of it, which allude to some of its peculiar Doctrines.

§. 2. That the End of Man is to live conformably to Nature, was univerfally agreed on amongft all the Philofophers: but, in what that Conformity to Nature confifts, was the Point in Difpute. The Epicureans maintained, that it confifted in Pleafure; of which they confittuted Sense the Judge (a). The Stoics, on the contrary, placed it in an abfolute Perfection of the Soul. Neither of them feem to have underflood Man in his mixed Capacity; but while the first debased him to a mere Animal, the last exalted him to a pure Intelligence; and both considered him as independent, uncorrupted, and sufficient, citier by Height of Virtue, or by well-regulated Indulgence, to his own Happines. The Stoical Excels was more useful to the Public, as it often produced great and noble Efforts towards that Perfection, to which it was supposed possible for human Nature to arrive. Yet, at the same time, by stattering Man with salfe and presumptuous Ideas of his own Power and Excellence, it tempted even the Best to Pride: a Vice not only dreadfully mischievous in human Society, but, perhaps of all others, the most infuperable Bar to real inward Improvement.

the

§. 3. Epitietus often mentions Three Topics, or Claffes, under which the Whole of Moral Philotophy is comprehended. These are, the Desires and Aversions, the Pursuits and Avoidances, or the Exercise of the active Powers, and the Alleuts of the Understanding.

⁽a) Scufibus ipfis judicari valuptates. Cic. de Fin. L. II. By Pleafure the Epicureans fometimes explained themselves to mean, only Freedom from Uneafines: but the Philosophers of other Sects in general, as well as Cievo, infit, producing their own Expressions for it, that they meant centual Delights. This, indeed, was more explicitly the Doctrine of Artifippus, the Father of the Cyrenaics: a Sect, however, which funk into the Epicureans; whose Notions plainly led to the Dissolutions for remarkable in the Lives of most of them.

§. 4. The Defires and Averfions were confidered as fimple Opegers Affections of the Mind, arifing from the Apprehention, that Exxlusers. any thing was conducive to Happiness, or the contrary. The first Care of a Proficient in Philosophy was, to regulate these in such a manner, as never to be disappointed of the one, or incur the other: a Point no otherwise attainable, than by regarding all Externals as absolutely indifferent. Good must always be the Object of Desire, and Evil of Aversion. The Person then, who considers Life, Health, Ease, Friends, Reputation, &c. as Good; and their Contraries as Evil, must necessarily defire the one, and be averse to the other: and, consequently, must often find his Desire disappointed, and his Aversion incurred. The Stoics, therefore, restrained Good and Evil to Virtue and Vice alone: and excluded all Externals from any Share in human Happiness, which they made entirely dependent on a right Choice. From this Regulation of the Defires and Aversions follows that Freedom from Perturbation, Grief, Anger, Pity, &c. and in fhort, that univerfal Apathy, which they every-where strongly inculcate.

§. 5. The next Step to Stoical Perfection was, the Class of Purfuits and Avoidances (b). As the Defires and Avorfions O; was are fimple Affections, the Purfuits and Avoidances are Apopular.

⁽b) The Stoics define thefe Terms: the one, a Motion, by which we are carried toward fome Object; the other, a Motion, by which we frive to flun it. The original Words, by a Happines in the Grock Language, are properly opposed to each other; which the English will not admit. I have chosen the best I could find, and wish they were better.

Exertions of the active Powers towards the procuring or declining any thing. Under this Head was comprehended the whole System of moral Duties, according to Their incomplete Ideas of them: and a due Regard to it was supposed to ensure a proper Behaviour in all the social Relations. The constant Performance of what these point out, naturally followed from a Regulation of the Desires and Aversions in the first Topic: for where the Inclinations are exerted and restrained as they ought, there will be nothing to mislead us in Action.

§. 6. The last Topic, and the Completion of the Stoic Character, was that of the Assets (c). As the second was to produce a Security from Failure in Practice, this was to secure an Infallibility in Judgment, and to guard the Mind from ever either admitting a Falshood, or dissenting from Truth. A wise Man, in the Stoic Scheme, was never to be mistaken, or to form any Opinion. Where Evidence could not be obtained, he was to continue in Suspense. His Understanding was never to be misled, even in Suspense.

⁽c) It seems firange, that the Stoics generally put the Affections and Will should be governed by the Understanding; which, therefore, should be rectified, in order to do its Office well. Epitletus seems to be of this Opinion in B. I. c. 17. But, perhaps, they thought common Sense, or natural Logic, sufficient for this Purpose; and artificial Logic, which they meant, but did not express clearly, by the Word Affents, necessary as a Guard only against Sophistry. Yet their mentioning it, as a Guard asso gaainst being milled, when they were in Drink, and even in their Dreams, leaves but little Room for this Consecture.

however, there is not a perfect Agreement: and some Authors are so very reasonable, as to admit it possible for a Philosopher to be mistaken in his Judgment, after he hath lost his Senses (d).

- §. 7. The Subjects of these several Classes of philosophic furtables. Exercise are, the Appearances of Things (e). By these Appearances the Stoics understood the Impressions (f) made on the Soul, by any Objects, presented either to the Senses, or to the Understanding. Thus a House, an Estate, Life, Death, Pain, Reputation, &c. (considered in the View, under which they are presented to the perceptive Faculties) in the Stoical Sense are, Appearances. The Use of Appearances is common to Brutes, and Men; an intelligent Use of them belongs only to the latter: a Distinction, which is carefully to be observed in reading these Discourses.
- §. 8. That Judgment, which is formed by the Mind con-Δογματα. cerning the Appearances, the Stoics termed Principles: and these Principles give a Determination to the Choice.

Nam fi argumentaberis, fapientem multo vino incbriari, et retinere rectum tenorem, etiamfi temulentus fit: licet colligas, nec veneno poto moriturum, &c. Sen. Epif. 83.

^{΄ (}d) Και μην την αρετην Χρυσιπτος αποδλητην, Κλεανθης δε αναποδλητην΄ ΄ ω, μες, αποδλητην δια μεθην και μελαγχολιαν΄ ΄ ο δε, αναποδλητην, δια δεβαιους καπαληψες. Dioc. Labrit. in Zeno.

⁽c) The original Word is of peculiar Signification among the Stoics: and I wish it could have been rendered into English, in a manner less ambiguous, and more expressive of its Meaning. But the Stoic Language perished with the Stoic Sect: and scarcely any of its technical Terms can now be rendered intelligible, except by a Paraphrase, or a Definition.

⁽f) Τυπωσιν εν ψυχη. DIOG. LAERT. L. VII. §. 45.

vi

Προαιρε· σεις. §. 9. The Choice, among the Stoics, fignified, either the Faculty of Willing; or a deliberate Election made of some Action, or Course of Life.

§. 10. As the Appearances respect particular Objects, the Tigolar Pre-conceptions are general innate Notions, such as they supposed to take original Possession of the Mind, before it forms any of its own (g). To adapt these Pre-conceptions to particular Cases, is the Office of Reason: and is often insisted on by Epičtetus, as a Point of the highest Importance.

Ευροια.

§. 11. By the Word, which throughout this Translation is rendered Proferity, the Stoics understood the internal State of the Mind, when the Affections and active Powers were so regulated, that it confidered all Events as happy: and, confequently, must enjoy an uninterrupted Flow of Success; since nothing could fall out contrary to its Wishes (b).

Thefe, which have been mentioned, are the technical Terms of the greatest Confequence in the Stoic Philosophy: and which, for that Reason, are, except in a very few Places, always rendered by the same English Word. There are other Words used in a peculiar Sense by this Sect: but, as they are not of equal Importance, they are neither so strictly translated, nor need any particular Definition.

⁽ξ) Ετι δε 'η προληψις, εννοια φυσική των καθ' ολου.

DIOG LAERT. L. VH. §. 54.

⁽b) I am fentible, that Profperity, in common Ufe, relates wholly to external Circumfances: but I could find no better Word to express the internal good Condition of Mind, which the Stoics meant by Ευρρία. There is an Infrance of the like Ufe 1 Yobn iii. 2.

§. 12. The Stoics held Logic in the highest Esteem: and often carried it to fuch a trifling Degree of Subtilty, as rendered their Arguments very tedious and perplexed. The frequent References to logical Questions, and the Use of fyllogiftical Terms, are the leaft agreeable Part of the Difcourses of EpiEletus: fince, however well they might be understood by some of his Hearers, they are now unintelligible to the greatest Part of his Readers. Indeed, with all his Strength and Clearness of Understanding, he seems to have been hurt by this favourite Science of his Sect. One is sometimes furprifed to find his Reafoning incoherent and perplexed: and his Scholars rather filenced by Interrogatories, which they are unable to comprehend, than convinced by the Force of Truth; and then given up by him, as if they were hopeless and unteachable. Yet many a well-meaning Underflanding may be loft in a Wood by the Confusion of dialectical Quibbles, which might have been led, without Difficulty, to the Point in view, if it had been suffered to follow the Track of common Sense.

§. 13. The Stoic Scheme of Theology, as it is explained in Cicero, and other ancient Writers, appears, in many Parts of it, strangely perplexed and abfurd. Some however of this seening Absurdity may possibly arise from the Use of strong Figures; and the infinite Difficulty of treating a Subject, for which no human Language can supply proper and adequate Terms (i). The Writings of the first Founders of the

 ⁽i) Quidquid de Deo dixeris, quidquid tacitæ mentis cogitatione conceperis, in humanum transilit, et corrumpitur, sensum: nec habet propriæ

the Stoic Philosophy, who treated expressly on Physiology and Metaphyfics, are now loft: and all that can be known of their Doctrine is from Fragments, and the Accounts given of them by other Authors. By what can be collected from these, and particularly by the Account which Diogenes Laertius gives of the Stoics, they appear to have held, that there is one supreme God, incorruptible, unoriginated (k), immortal, rational, and perfect in Intelligence and Happiness: unsusceptible of all Evil: governing the World, and every thing in it, by his Providence: not however of the buman Form; but the Creator of the Universe: the Father likewise of all (1): and that the several Names of Apollo. Minerva, Ceres, &c. only denote different Exertions of his Power in the different Parts of the Universe (m). It would be well, if they had ftopt here: but they plainly speak of the World, as God; or of God, as the Soul of the World; which they call his Substance (n): and I do not recollect any Proof, that they believed Him to exist in the ex tramundane Space. Yet they held the World to be finite (0), priæ fignificationis notam, quod nostris verbis dicitur, atque ad humana negotia compositis.

- ARNOB. adv., Gentes. L. III. p. 111. Ed. Lugd. Bat. 1651.

 (k) Αςθαρτος και αγεργρατος. Diog. LAER. L. VII. §. 137.
- (I) Θευτ δ΄ επαι Ζωοτ αθατατον, λογικον, τελειον, η τορρου εν ευθαιμονια, νακύν παιτος ευθτιθεκτον, προυσκικον κόσμου τε και των εν κοσμω' μη επαι μεττι ευθοντομορφον' ειναι δε τον μεν δημιουργον των ολων, ωσπερ και κανεία παιτων. 1b. §. 147.
 - (ψ) 11ολλαις προσηγοριαις προσονομάζεται κάτα τας δυνάμεις. Ib.
- (*) Outlar It. Θ elu Zhrwr mer gingi tor odor nogmer nai tor ouparor. Jb. §. 1., 8.
 - (6) O per sur normos memerarqueros equ. Ib.

and corruptible: and that, at certain Periods, it was to undergo fuccessive Conflagrations, and then all Beings were to be reforbed into God, and again reproduced by Him (p). What they intended by being reforbed into God, as I do not comprehend, I will not attempt to explain: but I fear they underflood by it, a Loss of separate personal Existence. Yet some of the later Stoics departed from this Doctrine of the Conflagration, and supposed the World to be immortal (q). Indeed there is often fo much Obscurity, and Appearance of Contradiction, in their Expressions, that it is very difficult, if not impossible, to form any precise Idea of their Meaning. They who, with Impartiality, read what the ancient Philosophers, of all Sects, have written on the Nature of God, will often find Cause to think, with the utmost Veneration and Gratitude, on the only Book, in which this important Article is explained, fo far as is necessary to be known, in a manner perfectly agreeable to the Principles of fimple, unperverted Reason. For what it graciously teaches more than Reason could, it confirms by fuch Evidences of its Authority, as Reason must admit, or contradict itself.

§. 14. The Stoics fometimes define God to be an intelligent, fiery Spirit, without Form, but paffing into whatever Things it pleafes, and affimilating itself to all (r): fometimes an active, operative Fire (s). It might be hoped, that these were only metaphorical Phrases, if they did not expressly speak of God as corporeal; which is objected to them by Platarch (t). Indeed they defined all Effence to be Body (u). An Error of which, probably, they did not discover the ill Tendency, any more than Tertullian; who inconsiderately followed them in this very unphilosophical Notion, that what is not Body, is nothing at all (w). His Christian Faith secures him from the Imputation of Impiety: and the just and becoming Manner, in which the Stoics, in many Instances, speak of God, should incline one to form the same sayourable Judgment of them: and those Authors seem guilty of great Injustice, who represent them, as little better than Atheiss.

⁽p) Κατα χρονων ποιας περιοθους αναλίσκων εις εαυτον πασαν την ουσιας, και παλιν εξ εαυτου γεννων. ib. §. 137.

⁽q) See Philo Judæus, of the Incorruptibility of the World, p. 947. Ed. Par.

⁽r) Θέος ετι πνευμα νοέρον και πυρωθές, ουκ εχον μορφην, μεταθαλλον δ ε εις α δουλεται και συνέξομοιουμένον πασι. Posidonius.

§. 15. They held the Eternity of Matter, as a paffive Principle; but that it was reduced into Form by God; and that the World was made, and is continually governed by Him (x). They fometimes reprefent him, as modelling the Conftitution of the World with fupreme Au-

⁽s) Tup Texvixor. PLUT. de Placit. Philosoph. L. I. c. 7.

⁽¹⁾ Ουτοι τον Θεον, αρχην οντα, Σωμα νεβρον, και νόυν εν 'υλπ' ποιοιυντες, ου καθαρον, ουδε απλουε ουδε ασυθετον, αλλα εξ έτερου, και δι έτερου απο. φαινουτι. Plut. de communióus notifits adv. διοίτοι. p. 1085.

⁽¹¹⁾ Σοιμα δε ετι, κατ' αυτους, 'η ουσία. Diog. LAERT. L. VII. §. 150.

⁽w) Adv. Praxeam, c. 7. Yet, De Anima, c. 7. he fays, Omne corporate paffibile eft; which he certainly did not think God was.

⁽x) Δοκι δαυτοι αρχαι είναι των ολων δυο, το ποιουν και το πασχον τα μεν ουν πασχον είναι την αποίον ουσίαν, την υλην. Το δε ποίουν, τον εν αυτη λογον, τον Θεον. Dioc. Larr. L. VII. §, 134.

thority (y): at others, as limited by the Materials, which He had not the Power to change (a). Epitetus may be thought to incline to this latter Opinion (a): yet his Words are capable of a different Turn. And there are, perhaps, more Arguments, in the Writings of the Stoics, to prove their Belief of the uncontroulable Power of the Deity in the Formation of Things, than those, which some unguarded Exprefions appear to furnish against it.

- §. 16. Of all the Philosophers the Stoics were the clearest and most zealous Affertors of a particular Providence (b): a Belief, which was treated with the utmost Contempt by the Epicureans (c). As this Principle is, of all others, the most conducive to the Interests of Virtue, and lays the Foundation of all true Piety, the Stoics are intitled to the highest Honour for their steady Desence of it; and their utter Rejection of the idle, and contemptible, Notion of Chance (d).
- §. 17. By Fate they feem to have understood a Series of Events, appointed by the immutable Counsels of God: or, ⁽y) Deus ifta temperat, que circumfusa Rectorem sequuntur et Ducem. Potentius autem est quod facit, quod est Deus, quam materia patiens Dei Sen. Epis. 65.

Nulli igitur est naturæ obediens, aut subjectus Deus. Omnem ergo regit ipse naturam. C1c. de Nat. Deor. L. II. §. 30. Ed. Dav.

⁽²⁾ Non potest artifex mutare materiam. SEN. de Provid. c. 8.

⁽a) B. I. c. 1.

⁽b) Non universo Hominum Generi, solum, sed etiam singulis, &c. Cic. de Nat. Deor. L. III.

⁽c) Anus fatidica. Ib. L. I.

⁽d) Nec fine Ratione, quamvis fubita, accidere. SEN. de Provid. c. 1.

that Law of his Providence, by which he governs the World (e). It is evident by their Writings, that they meant it in no Senfe, which interferes with the Liberty of human Actions. Cicero allows, that Chrysppus endeavoured to reconcile Fate with Free Will: and that it was contrary to his Intention, that, by a perplexed Way of arguing, he confirmed the Doctrine of Necestity. (f). Whenever they speak of God, as subject very strong and unguarded manner, their Meaning seems to be, that his own eternal Will is his Law: that he cannot change; because He always ordains what is best (g): and that, as Fate is no more than a connected Series of Causes, God is the First Original Cause, on which all the rest depend (b).

§. 18. They imagined the whole Universe to be peopled with Gods, Genii, and Demons: and among other inferior Divinities reckoned the Sun, Moon, and Stars, which they conceived to be animated and intelligent; or inhabited by particular Deities, as the Body is by the Soul, who presided over them, and directed their Motions (i).

⁽ε) Λοχος, καθ' ον 'ο κοσμος διεξαχεται. Diog. LAER. L. VII. §. 149.

⁽f) Chryfppu.—Applicat fe ad eos potius, qui neceffitate motus Animos [Animorum. Dav.] liberatos volunt. Dum autem verbis utitur fuis, delabitur in eas Difficultates, ut neceffitatem Fati confirmet invitus. Ctc. de Pato, §. 17. Dav. Chryftpus autem, cum et neceffitatem improbaret, &c. §. 18.

⁽g) SEN. de Beneficiis. L. VI. c. 23.

⁽b) Ib. L. IV. c. 7.

⁽i) Cic. de Natura Deorum L. II. c. 15.

§ 19. The Stoics held both the above-mentioned Intelligences, and the Souls of Men, to be Portions of the Effence of God (k), or Parts of the Soul of the World (!): and to be corporeal (m), and perifiable (n). Some of them indeed maintained, that human Souls fublished after Death: but that they were, like all other Beings, to be confumed at the Conflagration. Cleanthes taught, that all Souls lasted till that Time: Chrysppus, only those of the Good (o). Seneca is perpetually wavering; fornetimes speaking of the Soul as immortal; and, at others, as perishing with the Body. And indeed (there is nothing, but Confusion, and a melancholy Uncertainty, to be met with among the Stoic, on this Subject.

§. 20. There is, I think, very little Evidence to be found, that they believed future Rewards or Punishments, compared with that which appears to the contrary (p): at least the Reader will observe, that EpiEtetus never afferts either He ftrongly insists, that a bad Man hath no other Punishment, than being such; and a good Man, no other Re-

⁽k) Epic. B. I. c. 14. &c.

^{(1) &#}x27;He meen eval tas ev tois Zwois. Diog. LARRT. L. VII. S. 1.56.

⁽m) Την δε ψυχην-και Σωμα ειναι. Ib.

⁽η) Την ψυχην μετα θανατον επιμενειν, φθαρτην δ' ειναι. Ιb.

⁽⁰⁾ Κλεανθης πασας, επιδιαμενείν φασι, μεχρι εππυρωσεως. Χρυσιππος δές, τας των Σοφων μογων. Ιb. §. 157.

⁽p) Lactantius, indeed, L. VII. c. 7. fays: Effe inferos Zenon Stoicus docuit, et fedes piorum ab impiis effe difcretas: et illos quidem quietas et delectabiles incolere Regiones; hos vero lucre pænas in tene-brofis locis, atque in cæni voraginibus horrendis. But I know not that any other Author relates this of him.

ward (q): and he tells his Disciple, that, when Want of Necessaries obliges him to go out of Lise, he returns to the Four Elements, of which he was made: that there is no Hades, nor Acheron, nor Pyriphlegethon (r): and he clearly affirms, that personal Existence is lost in Death (s). Had Epistetus believed future Rewards, he must, of course, have made frequent mention of them (r). M. Antoninus, upon a Supposition that Souls continue after Death, makes them to remain for some Time in the Air: and then to be changed, diffisied, kindled, and resumed into the productive Intelligence of the Universe (u). In another Place, he vindicates ⁽q) See B. I. c. 12. p. 48. B. III. c. 7. p. 249. Id. c. 24. p. 317. B. IV. c. 9. §. 2, 3. Id. c. 10. §. 2. c. 12. §. 4.

⁽r) B. III. c. 13. p. 265.

⁽t) The only Passage, that I can recollect, in which any Intimation feems to be given of a future Reward, is in the XVth Chapter of the Enchiridion: and, probably, even there he means only a Happiness to be enioved in the prefent Life, after due Improvement in Philosophy; though he expresses it by the very strong Figures of partaking the Feasts and Empire of the Gods. For, doubtless, the wife Man, like his Kindred Deities, feafted upon every thing that happened; and, by willing as Yupiter did, reigned along with Him. Besides, Epictetus says there, of Diogenes, and Heraclitus, or Hercules, not that they are, but that they were divine Persons: which must refer to something which had ceased when he wrote; and, confequently, to their Felicity before, not after .. . their Deaths. At least, he doth not intimate any thing concerning their second Life: and if that was to be short, as it might be (and it could not reach beyond the Conflagration), and was not very certain neither, the Hope of it would be a very infufficient Counterbalance to vehement Appetites and Paffions.

⁽a) L. 4. § 21. These Expressions, distinct and kindled, allude to the Stoic Doctrine, that Souls are Portions of the Deity, separated for a Time, and that His Essence is Fire.

the Conduct of Providence, on the Hypothesis, that the Souls of the Good are extinguished by Death (w).

- §. 21. The Stoics thought, that every fingle Person had a tutelary Genius assigned him by God, as a Guardian of his Soul, and a Superintendent of his Conduct (x): and that all Virtue and Happines' consist in acting in concert with this Genius, with Reference to the Will of the supreme Director of the Whole (y). Sometimes, however, they make the Genius to be only the ruling Faculty of every one's own Mind (x).
- §. 22. A very flight Examination of their Writings is fufficient to convince any impartial Reader, how little the Doctrines of this Sect were fitted to influence the Generality of Mankind. But indeed, about the Generality of Mankind, the Stoics do not appear to have given themselves any kind of Trouble. They seemed to consider All (except the Few, who were Students in the Intricacies of a philosophic System) as very little superior to Beasts: and, with great Tranquillity, left them to follow the Devices of their own ungoverned Appetites and Passions. How unlike was this to the dif-

⁽w) L. 12. §. 5.

⁽x) Ειναι τινας δαιμονας ανθρωπων συμπαθειαν εχοντας, εποπτας των ανθρωπειων πραγματων. Diog. Laert. L. VII. §. 151.

Scit Genius, natale comes qui temperat Astrum,

Naturæ Deus humanæ, mortalis in unum-

Quodeunque caput. Hor. L. I. Ep. II. v. 186, &c.

See Epiet. B. I. c. 12. p. 49.

⁽y) Ειναι δ'αυτο τουτο που ευθαιμοπος αρετιν και την ευροιαν διου, οταν παντα πρακτιντιά κατα την Συμφωνιαν του παρ, εκατω βαιμιστος, προς την του ολου Διεικητου βουλησιν. Dioc. LAERT. L. VII. §, 88.

⁽z) Sec M. Antoninus, L. II. c. 13. 17. L. III. c. 3. 5. L. V. c. 27.

INTRODUCTION.

XVI

fusive Benevolence of the divine Author of the Christian Religion, who adapted his Discourses to the Comprehension, and extended the Means of Happiness to the Attainment, of all Mankind!

- §. 23. There feem to be only two Methods, by which the prefent Appearances of Things are capable of being reconciled to our Ideas of the Justice, Wisdom, and Goodness of God: the one is the Doctrine of a future State; the other, the Position, that Virtue alone is sufficient to human Happiness in this (a). The first, which was the Method chosen by Socrates, solves every Difficulty, without contradicting either Sense or Reason: the latter, which was unfortunately maintained by the Stoics, is repugnant to both.
- §. 24. That there is an intrinsic Beauty and Excellency in moral Goodness; that it is the Ornament and Perfection of all rational Beings; and that, till Conscience is stifled by repeated Guilt, we feel an Obligation to prefer and follow, so far as we perceive it, in all Cases; and find an inward Satisfaction, and generally receive outward Advantages from
 - (a) Condonanda tamen fententia, Stoice, veftra eft.

 Nam fi poft obitum, neque præmia fint, neque pænæ,
 Heu, quo perventum eft! Heu, quid jam denique reftat!
 Scilicet humanas gerit aut Res numen inique,
 Aut nil curat iners, aut, fi bene temperat orbem,
 Nemo bonus mifer eft, nemo improbus efte beatus
 In vita poffit, Gens ut fibi Stoica fingit.

 1. HAWKINS BROWNE.

I have a fingular Pleasure in quoting these Lines, from a Poem, which does Honour to our Country.

fo doing, are Positions, which no thinking Person can contradict: but it doth not follow from hence, that in fuch a Mixture, as Mankind, it is its own fufficient Reward. God alone, infinitely perfect, is happy in, and from Himfelf. The Virtue of finite Beings must be defective: and the Happiness of created Beings must be dependent. It is undeniable Fact, that the natural Confequences of Virtue in some, may be interrupted by the Vices of others. How much are the best Persons liable to suffer from the Follies of the Unthinking; from the Ill-nature, the Rage, the Scorn of the Malevolent; from the cold and the penurious Hardheartedness of the Unfeeling; from Persecutions, for the sake both of Religion and Honesty; from ill Returns to conjugal, to parental, to friendly Affection; and from an innumerable Train of other Evils, to which the most amiable Dispositions are usually the most sensible. It is no less undeniable, that the natural Confequences of Virtue are interrupted by the Struggles of our own Passions; (which we may overcome rewardably, though very imperfectly; or, if we live to overcome more perfectly, we may not live to enjoy the Victory;) by Sickness, Pain, Languor, Want; and by what we feel from the Death, or the Sufferings of those, with whom we are most nearly connected. We are often indeed afflicted by many of these Things, more than we ought to be. But Concern for fome, at least our own Failings for Instance, is directly a Duty; for others, it is visibly the Instrument of moral Improvement; for more still, it is the unavoidable Refult of our Frame: and they who carry it too far, may, on the whole, be good Characters; and even they who do not, in any confiderable Degree, may however be extremely wretched.

xviii INTRODUCTION.

wretched. How then can Virtue be its own Reward to Mankind in general, or indeed a proportionable Reward to almost any Man? Or how, unless the View be extended beyond such a Scene of Things, the certain Means of Happiness? The originally appointed Means of Happiness it undoubtedly is: but that it should be an effectual and infallible Means to Creatures so impersect, passing through such a disordered World, is impossible, without a state of suture Reward; and of this the Gospel alone gives us full Assurance.

- §. 25. By rejecting the Doctrine of Recompences in another Life, the Stoics were reduced to the Extravagance of fuppofing Felicity to be enjoyed in Circumftances, which are incapable of it. That a good Man ftretched on a Rack, or repoing on a Bed of Rofes, should enjoy himself equally, was a Notion which could gain but few Proselytes: and a sad Experience, that Pain was an Evil, sometimes drove their own Disciples from the thorny Asperities of the Portico, to the flowery Gardens of Epicurus.
- §. 26. The abfolute Indifference of all Externals, and the Pofition, That Things independent on Choice are nothing to us, the grand Point on which their Arguments turned, every one, who feels, knows to be false: and the Practice of the Wifest and Best among them, proved it in Fact to be so. It is remarkable, that no Sect of Philosophers ever so dogmatically prescribed, or so frequently committed, Suicide, as those very Stoics, who taught that the Pains and Sufferings, which they strove to end by this Act of Rebellion against the Decrees of Providence, were no Evils. How absolutely that horrid horrid Practice contradicted all their noble Precepts of Refignation and Submiffion to the divine Will, is too evident to need any Enlargement. They professed indeed in Suicide to follow the divine Will: but this was a lamentably weak Pretence. Even supposing Sufferings to be Evils, they are no Proof of a Signal from God to abandon Life; but to show an exemplary Patience, which he will reward: but, supposing them, as the Stoics did, not to be Evils, they afford not fo much as the Shadow of a Proof.

§. 27. As the Stoics by the Permission of Suicide, plainly implied, that external Inconveniences were not indifferent in the Extremity; it follows, that they must proportionably be allowed not to be indifferent in the inferior Degrees: of which Zeno feemed to be perfectly well convinced, by hanging himfelf when his Finger aked. And where was the Use of taking fo much Pains to fay, and believe, what they knew to be false? It might, perhaps, be thought to be of some Benefit, in the Time of the later Stoics, to the great Men of Rome, whom the Emperors frequently butchered at their Pleasure: and this is the Use, to which Epistetus is perpetually applying it. Yet, even in this Case, the Stoic Doctrine, where Men could bring themselves to act upon it, made them abfurdly rough, as appears by the Hiftory of Helvidius Priscus: and hindered the Good, they might otherwise have done. And, if a Man, taught thus to despife Tortures and Death, should happen at the same time to be wrong-headed, for which he had no fmall Chance, he would, in one Refpect, be a more terrible wild Beaft, than an Enthufiast of any other Sect; as he would not think his Sufferings Evils: though C 2 though in another he would be less so, as he would not hope to be rewarded for them hereaster.

INTRODUCTION

§. 28. The Stoics are frequently, and juftly, charged with great Arrogance in their Discourses, and even in their Addreffes to God. They affert however the Doctrine of Grace, and the Duty of Praise and Thanksgiving for the divine Affiftance in moral Improvements (b). But there doth not, I think, appear any Inflance of a Stoic, or perhaps any other Heathen Philosopher, addressing his Repentance to God, and begging Pardon for his Failings, or directing his Disciples to do it. Indeed nothing can excuse their Idolatry of human Nature: which they proudly, and inconfiftently supposed perfect and felf-sufficient. Seneca carried the Matter fo far, as by an impious Antithefis, to give his wife Man the Superiority to God (c). Epictetus indeed was attentive enough to the Voice of Conscience to own himself not perfect (d): and he fometimes tells his Hearers, that they cannot be perfect yet (e). But even He at other times informs them, that they are not inferior to the Gods (f). The Stoical Boafting will, however, imply less of personal Arrogance, if we can suppose, that those Speeches, which so ill become human Imperfection, were always uttered, as per-

XX

⁽b) B. II. c. 18. §. 3, 4. B. III. c. 21. p. 281. p. 373, 374. See likewife M. Antoninus, L. I. §. 17. L. IX. §. 4. L. XII. §. 14.

⁽c) Est aliquid, quo sapiens antecedat Deum. Ille natura beneficio, nen ito, sapiens est: ecce res magna, habere imbecillitatem hominis, securntatem Dei. Sen. Epift. 53.

⁽d) B. IV. c. 1. §. 17. B. IV. c. 8. p. 408.

⁽e) B. I. c. 15. p. 55. B. IV. c. 12. §. 4.

^(/) B. I. c. 12. p. 49.

haps in part they often were, in the Character of their Idol, the perfectly wife and good Man, which they owned to be merely an ideal $\operatorname{Being}(g)$. At leaft, it may be affirmed with Truth, that they frequently mention themselves with Decency and Humility, and with an express Consession of their Deviation from this faultless Exemplar.

§. 29. But then where was the Use of their favourite Doctrine, that a wife Man must always be happy? Might not a Person, determined to follow his own Inclinations, very reasonably object, "What is that to me, if I am not, or to " any body elfe, if no one ever was, a wife Man? But, fup-" pose I were one; which is the better grounded Argument? "You must always be happy, and therefore Externals are no " Evils: or, These Things are Evils, and therefore I am not " happy .- But Epictetus will fay, You have a Remedy: the " Door is open; go, with great good Humour and Thank-" fulness, and hang yourself: and there will be an End of " your Pain and you together .--- A fine Scheme of Happiness " indeed! and much to be thankful for! Why, is it not the " fhorter and merrier Way, instead of studying this crabbed " Philosophy, to indulge myself, in whatever I like, as long " as I can, (it may chance to be a good while) and hang " myfelf thankfully, when I feel Inconveniences from that? " The Door is just as open in one Case, as in the other; " and nothing beyond it, either pleafing or terrible in " either." Such, alas! is the Conclusion too commonly ⁽g) Quis fapiens fit, aut fuerit, nec ipfos Stoicos folere dicere. C1c. Acad. L. IV.

INTRODUCTION.

xxii

drawn; and fuch must be the Consequence of every Doctrine, not built upon folid Foundations.

§. 30. Epictetus often lays it down as a Maxim, that it is impossible for one Person to be in Fault, and another to be the Sufferer. This, on the Supposition of a future State, will certainly be made true at last; but in the Stoical Sense, and System, is an absolute Extravagance. Take any Person of plain Understanding, with all the Feelings of Humanity about him, and fee whether the fubtlest Stoic will ever be able to convince him, that while he is infulted, oppreffed, and tortured, he doth not fuffer. See what Comfort it will afford him, to be told, that, if he supports his Afflictions and ill Treatment with Fortitude and Patience, Death will fet him free, and then he and his Persecutor will be equally rewarded; will equally lofe all perfonal Existence, and return to the Elements. How different are the Confolations proposed by Christianity, which not only affures its Disciples, that they shall rest from their Labours in Death, but that their Works shall follow them: and, by allowing them to rejoice in Hope, teaches them the most effectual Way of becoming patient in Tribulation.

§. 31. The Stoical Doctrine, that human Souls are literally Parts of the Deity, was equally shocking, and hurtful: as it supposed Portions of his Being to be wicked and miserable; and, by debasing Mens Ideas of the divine Dignity, and teaching them to think themselves essentially as good as He, nourished in their Minds an irreligious and fatal Presumption. Far differently the Christian System represents Mankind,

INTRODUCTION. xxiii

Mankind, not as a Part of the Effence, but a Work of the Hand of God: as created in a State of improveable Virtue and Happiness: Fallen, by an Abuse of Free Will, into Sin, Misery, and Weakness (b); but redeemed from them by an Almighty Saviour; furnished with additional Knowlege and Strength; commanded to use their best Endeavours; made sensible, at the same time, how wretchedly desective they are; yet affured of endless Felicity on a due Exertion of them. The Stoic Philosophy infults human Nature, and discourages all our Attempts, by enjoining and promising a Perfection in this Life, of which we feel ourselves incapable. The Christian Religion shows Compassion to our Weakness, by prescribing to us only the practicable Task of aiming continually at further Improvements; and animates our Endeavours, by the Promise of a divine Aid, equal to every Trial.

§. 32. Specifying thus the Errors and Defects of so celebrated a System, is an unpleasing Employment: but in an Age, fond of preferring the Guesses of human Sagacity before the unerring Declarations of God, it seemed on this Occasion necessary to observe, that the Christian Morality is agreeable to Reason and Nature: that of the Stoics, for the most part, sounded on Notions, intelligible to Few; and which anne could admit, without Contradiction to their own Hearts. They reasoned, many times, admirably well, but from false Principles: and the noblest of their practical Precepts, being xxiv INTRODUCTION.

⁽b) — Cito nequitia fubrepit: virtus difficilis inventu eff, rectorem, ducemque defiderat. Etiam fine magiftro vitia difcuntur. SEN. Natural. Quell. L. III. c. 30.

built on a fandy Bafis, lay at the Mercy of every ftrong Temptation.

§. 33. Stoicism is indeed, in many Points inferior to the Doctrine of Socrates: which did not teach, that all Externals were indifferent: which did teach a future State of Recompence; and, agreeably to that, forbad Suicide. It doth not belong to the prefent Subject to show, how much even this best System is excelled by Christianity. It is sufficient just to observe, that the Author of it died in a Profession, which he had always made, of his Belief in the popular Deities, whose Superflitions, and impure Worship was the great Source of Corruption in the Heathen World: and the last Words he uttered, were a Direction to his Friend, for the Performance of an idolatrous Ceremony. This melancholy Instance of Ignorance and Error, in the most illustrious Character for Wisdom and Virtue, in all Heathen Autiquity, is not mentioned as a Reflexion on his Memory, but as a Proof of human Weakness in general. Whether Reason could have discovered the great Truths, which in these Days are ascribed to it, because now seen so clearly by the Light of the Gospel, may be a Question; but that it never did, is an undeniable FaEt: and that is enough to teach us Thankfulness for the Blessing of a better Information. Socrates, who had, of all Mankind, the fairest Pretentions to fet up for an Inftructer and Reformer of the World, confessed, that he knew nothing, referred to Tradition, and acknowleged the Want of a superior Guide: and there is a remarkable Paffage in EpiEletys, in which he reprefents it, as the Office of his supreme God, or of One deputed by Him.

INTRODUCTION.

XXV

Him, to appear among Mankind, as a Teacher and Example (g).

§. 34. Upon the whole, the several Sects of Heathen Philosophy serve, as so many striking Inflances of the Imperfection of human Wisdom; and of the extreme Need of a divine Assistance, to rectify the Mistakes of depraved Reason, and to replace natural Religion on its true Foundation. The Stoics every-where testify the noblest Zeal for Virtue, and the Honour of God: but they attempted to establish them on Principles, inconsistent with the Nature of Man, and contradictory to Truth and Experience. By a direct Consequence of these Principles, they were liable to be seduced, and in Fact often were seduced, into Pride, Hardheartedness, and the last dreadful Extremity of human Guilt, Self-murder.

§ 35. But however indefenfible the Philosophy of the Stoics in feveral Instances may be, it appears to have been of very important Use, in the Heathen World: and they are, on many Accounts, to be considered in a very respectable Light. Their Doctrine of Evidence and fixed Principles, was an excellent Preservative from the Mischiefs, that might have arisen from the Scepticism of the Academics and Pyrrhonists, if unopposed: and their zealous Defence of a particular Providence, a valuable Antidote to the atheristical Scheme of Epicarus. To this may be added, that their strict Notions of Virtue in most Points, (for they fadly failed in fome) and the Lives of feveral among them, must contribute a good deal to preferve luxurious States from an absolutely universal Diffoluteness; and the Subjects of arbitrary Government, from a wretched and contemptible Pusilanimity.

xxvi INTRODUCTION.

§. 36. Even now, their Compositions may be read with great Advantage, as containing excellent Rules of Self-government, and of social Behaviour; of a noble Reliance on the Aid and Protection of Heaven, and of a perfect Refignation and Submission to the divine Will: Points, which are treated with great Clearness, and with admirable Spirit, in the Lesson of the Stoics; and though their Directions are feldom practicable on their Principles, in trying Cases, may be rendered highly useful in Subordination to Christian Research

§. 37. If, among those, who are so unhappy as to remain unconvinced of the Truth of Christianity, any are prejudiced against it by the Influence of unwarrantable Inclinations: such Persons will find very little Advantage in rejecting the Doctrines of the New Testament for those of the Portico; unless they think it an Advantage to be laid under moral Restraints, almost equal to those of the Gospel, while they are deprived of its Encouragements and Supports. Deviations from the Rules of Sobriety, Justice, and Piety, meet with small Indulgence in the Stoic Writings: and they, who prosess to admire Episteus, unless they pursue that severely virtuous Conduct which he every-where prescribes, will find themselves treated by him, with the utmost Degree of Scorn and and Contempt. An immoral Character is indeed, more or less, the Out-cast of all Sects of Philosophy: and Seneca quotes even Epicurus, to prove the universal Obligation of a virtuous Of this great Truth, God never left himself without Life (b). Witness. Persons of distinguished Talents and Opportunities feem to have been raifed, from time to time, by Providence, to check the Torrent of Corruption, and to preferve the Sense of moral Obligations on the Minds of the Multitude, to whom the various Occupations of Life left but little Leifure to form Deductions of their own. But then they wanted a proper Commission to enforce their Precepts: they intermixed with them, through false Reasoning, many gross Mistakes; and their unavoidable Ignorance, in feveral important Points, entangled them with Doubts, which eafily degenerated into pernicious Errors.

INTRODUCTION.

§ 38. If there are others, who reject Christianity, from Motives of Dislike to its peculiar Doctrines: they will scarcely fail of entertaining more favourable Impressions of it, if they can be prevailed on, with Impartiality, to compare the holy Scriptures, from whence alone the Christian Religion is to be learned, with the Stoic Writings; and then fairly to consider, whether there is any thing to be met with in the Discourses of our blessed Saviour, in the Writings of his Apostles, or even in the obscurest Parts of the prophetic Books, by which, equitably interpreted, either their Senses, or their Reason are contradicted, as they are by the Paradoxes of these Philosophers: and if not, whether Notices from above, of Things, in which, though we comprehend them but imperfectly, we are possibly much more interested, than at present we discern, ought not to be received with implicit Veneration; as useful Exercises and Trials of that Duty, which finite Understandings owe to infinite Wissom.

⁽d) Eo libentius Epicuri egregia dicta commemoro, ut iftis, qui ad illa confugient, fipe mala inducti, qua velamentum feipfos fuorum vitorum habituros exiftimant, probem, quocunque ierint, honefte effe vivendum. Sen. Epifl. 21. It was hard indeed to reconcile this with fome of his other Doctrines.

XXVIII INTRODUCTION.

§. 39. Antiquity furnishes but very few Particulars of the Life of Epitetus. He was born at Hierapolis, a City of Phrygia: but of what Parents, is unknown; as well as by what Means he came to Rome, where he was the Slave of Epaphroditus, one of Nero's Courtiers (i). It is reported, that when his Master once put his Leg to the Torture, Epitletus, with great Composure, and even smiling, observed to him; "You will certainly break my Leg:" which accordingly happened; and he continued, in the same Tone of Voice—"Did not I tell you, that you would break it (k)?" This Accident might, perhaps, be the Occasion of his Lameness: which, however, some Authors say he had from his early Years (l); and others attribute to the Rheumatism (m). At what Time he obtained his Liberty doth not appear. When the Philosophers, by a Decree of Domitian, were banished

⁽i) Suidas in Voc.

⁽h) ORIG. contra CELS. L. VII. §. 53.

^(/) SUIDAS in Voc.

⁽m) SIMPLIC. Com. p. 102.

INTRODUCTION. xxix

from Rome, Epičletus retired to Nicopolis (n), a City of Epirus, where he taught Philosophy; from which he doth not seem to have derived any external Advantages, as he is universally said to have been extremely poor. At least, he was so when he lived at Rome: where his whole Furniture consisted of a Bed (o), a Pipkin, and an Earthen Lamp (p); which last was purchased for about a hundred Pounds, after his Death, by a Person whom Lucian ridicules for it, as hoping to acquire the Wisdom of Epizletus by studying over it. His only Attendant was a Woman, whom he took in his advanced Years, to nurse a Child, whom, otherwise, one of his Friends would have exposed to perish (q): an amiable Proof of the poor old Man's Good-nature, and Disapprobation, it is to be hoped, of that shocking, yet common Instance of Heathen Blindness and Barbarity.

In this extreme Poverty, a Cripple, unattended, and deflitute of almost every Convenience of Life, Epistetus was not only obliged by the Rules of his Philosophy to think himself happy, but actually did so, according the Distich of which Aulus Gellius affirms him to have been the Author (r).

A Slave, in Body main'd, as Irus (s) poor; Yet to the Gods was Epictetus dear.

⁽n) A. GELL. L. XV. c. 11.

⁽⁰⁾ SIMPLIC. Com. p. 102.

⁽p) Id. Ib.

⁽q) Id. p. 272.

⁽r) A. GELLIUS, L. II. c. 18.

⁽s) The Name of a Beggar in Homer.

INTRODUCTION XXX

He is faid to have returned to Rome in the Reign of Adrian, and to have been treated by him with a high Degree of Familiarity (t). If this be true, he lived to a great Age. But that he should continue alive, to the Time of M. Antoninus, as Themistius (u), and Suidas (w) affirm, is utterly improbable (x), as the learned Fabricius observes; to whose Life of Epičletus (y) I am greatly indebted. When, or where, he died, is, I think, no-where mentioned. Authors agree in bearing Testimony to the unblemished Conduct of his Life, and the Usefulness of his Instructions. The last-named Emperor expresses much Obligation to a Friend, who had communicated his Works to him (2): and in another Place, he ranks him, not only with Chrysippus, but with Socrates (a). A. Gellius calls him the greatest of the Stoics (b): Origen affirms, that his Writings had done more Good than Plato's (c): And Simplicius fays, perhaps by way of indirect Opposition to an infinitely better Book, that he who is not influenced by them, is reclaimable by nothing but the Chastisements of another World (d). In what manner he instructed his Pupils, will be seen in the following Treatise.

⁽t) ÆLII. Spart. ADRIAN. C. 17. (u) Orat. Conf. ad Jovian. Imp.

⁽w) In Voc.

⁽x) The Reign of Nero began A. D. 54. of Adrian, 117. of M. Antoninus, 161.

⁽y) Bibl. Gr. Vol. III. p. 257.

⁽²⁾ L. I. §. 7.

⁽a) L. VII. §. 19.

⁽b) NoEt. Att. L. I. c. 2. (c) Contra Celf. L. VI. §. 2.

⁽d) Com. p. 2.

INTRODUCTION. XXXI

8. 40. There are fo many of the Sentiments and Expreffions of Christianity in it, that one should be strongly tempted to think, that Epicletus was acquainted with the New Testament, if such a Supposition was not highly injurious to his Character. To have known the Contents of that Book, and not to have been led by them into an Enquiry, which must have convinced him of their Truth, would argue fuch an Obstinacy of Prejudice, as one would not willingly impute to a Mind, which appears fo well disposed. And, even passing over this Consideration, to have borrowed so much from Christianity as he seems to have done, without making the leaft Acknowlegement from whence he received it, would be an Instance of Difingenuity, utterly unworthy of an honest Man, and inconsistent with his Practice in other Respects: for he often quotes, with great Applause, the Sentences of many Writers, not of his own Sect. Possibly indeed he might, like the other Heathens in general, have a peculiar Contempt of, and Aversion to, Christian Authors, as akin to the Yews, and Opposers of the established Worship; notwithstanding those Parts of them, which he must approve. But still I hope, his Conformity with the facred Writings may be accounted for, without supposing him acquainted with Christianity, as such. The great Number of its Professors, dispersed through the Roman Empire, had probably introduced feveral of the New Testament Phrases into the popular Language: and the Christian Religion might by that Time have diffused some Degree of general Illumination; of which many might receive the Benefit, who were ignorant of the Source, from whence it proceeded: and EpiEletus I apprehend to have been of this Number. Several striking

Inflances

XXXII INTRODUCTION.

Inftances of this Resemblance between him and the New Testament, have been observed in the Notes: and the attentive Reader will find many, which are not mentioned; and may perceive from them, either that the Stoics admired the Christian Language, however they came to the Knowlege of it; or that treating a Subject practically, and with a Feeling of its Force, leads Men to such strong Expressions, as we find in Scripture, and should find oftener in the Philosophers, if they had been more in earnest: but however, they occur frequently enough to vindicate those, in which the Scriptures abound, from the Contempt and Ridicule of light Minds.

8, 41. Arrian, the Disciple of Epictetus, to whom we are obliged for these Discourses, was a Greek by Birth, but a Senator and Conful of Rome: and an able Commander in He imitated Xenophon, both in his Life and Writings: and particularly, in delivering to Posterity the Conversations of his Master. There were originally Twenty Books of them, befides the Enchiridion, which feems to be taken out of them, and an Account of his Life and Death. Very little Order or Method is to be found in them, or was from the Nature of them to be expected. The Connexion is often scarcely discoverable: a Reference to particular Incidents, long fince forgotten, at the fame time that it evidences their Genuineness, often renders them obscure in some Places: and the great Corruption of the Text, in others, Yet, under all these Disadvantages, this immethodical Collection is perhaps one of the most valuable Remains of Antiquity: and they, who confult it with any Degree of Attention, can fearcely fail of receiving Improvement. Indeed it is hardly possible to be inattentive to so awakening a Speaker as Epittetus. There is such a Warmth and Spirit in his Exhortations; and his good Sense is enlivened by such a Keenness of Wit, and Gaiety of Humour, as render the Study of him, a most delightful as well as profitable Entertainment.

⁽m) FABRICII Bibl. Gr. Vol. III. L. IV. c. 8. p. 269, &c.

INTRODUCTION. xxxiii

§. 42. For this Reason it was judged proper, that a Translation of him should be undertaken; there being none, I believe, but of the Enchiridion, in any modern Language, excepting a pretty good French one, published about a hundred and fifty Years ago, and fo extremely scarce, that I was unable to procure it, till Mr. Harris obligingly lent it me, after I had published the Proposals for printing this: which, notwithstanding the Assistance given me in the Profecution of it, hath still, I am fensible, great Faults. But they, who will fee them the most clearly, will be the readiest to excuse, as they will know best the Difficulty of avoiding them. There is one Circumstance, which, I am apprehensive, must be particularly firiking, and possibly shocking to many, the frequent Use of some Words in an unpopular Sense: an Inconvenience, which, however, I flatter myfelf, the Introduction and Notes will, in some Degree, remove. In the Translation of technical Terms, if the fame Greek Word had not always been rendered in the fame manner, at least when the Propriety of our Language will at all permit it, every new Expression would have been apt to raise a new Idea. Reader, I hope, will pardon, if not approve, the Uncouthncfs,

XXXIV INTRODUCTION.

nefs, in many Places, of a Translation pretty strictly literal: as it feemed necessary, upon the whole, to preserve the original Spirit, the peculiar Turn and characteristic Roughness of the Author. For else, taking greater Liberties would have spared me no small Pains.

I have been much indebted to Mr. Upton's Edition: by which, many Paffages, unintelligible before, are cleared up. His Emendations have often affifted me in the Text; and his References furnished me with Materials for the historical Notes,

ERRATA

Poge xiii. 1.12. read Stoics.—P. xv. mte(x), r. c. 14, p. 53.—P. 10. l. 13, r. that he.—P. 12: reate (m), l. 3, for inferior r. fuperior.—P. 10, r. petrified, Perifichion.—P. x_k , l. x, r. which here.—1, 23, for inferior x_k for the reader x_k for x_k for the reader x_k for the reader x_k for the reader

[xxxv]

TABLE of CONTENTS.

NIRODUCTION. By the Iraniator Page r
Table of Contents xxxv
Arrian to Lucius Gellius - xli
D O O II 7
BOOKI
Chap. I. Of the Things which are, and of those which are not, in our own Power I Chap. II. In what Manner, upon every Occasion, to preserve our Character
Chap. III. How, from the Doctrine that God is the Father of Mankind, we may proceed to its Consequences - 13
Chap. IV. Of Improvement - 14.
Chap. V. Concerning the Academics - 19
Chap. VI. Of Providence 21
Chap. VII. Of the Use of convertible and hypothetical Propositions, and the like 26
Chap. VIII. That Faculties are not fafe to the Uninstructed 30
Chap. IX. How, from the Doctrine of our Kindred to God, we are to proceed to its Consequences — 33
Chap. X. Concerning Those, who strove for Preferment at Rome — 38
Chap. XI. Of natural Affection — 40
Chap. XII. Of Contentment40
c 2 Chap.
C a Chap.

KXXVI CONTENTS.

Chap. XIII. How every Thing may be performed acceptably to the Gods — Page 50
Chap. XIV. That all Things are under the divine Inspection
51
Chap. XV. What it is that Philosophy promises 54
Chap. XVI. Of Providence 55
Chap. XVI. Of Providence Chap. XVII. That the Art of Reasoning is necessary — 58 Chap. XVIII. That we are not to be angry with the Errors of others — 62
Chap. XIX. Of the Behaviour to be observed towards Tyrants
Chap. XX. In what manner Reason contemplates itself 70
Chap. XXI. Of the Desire of Admiration - 73
Chap. XXII. Of Pre-conceptions — 74
Chap, XXIII. Against Epicurus — 77
Chap. XXIV. How we are to struggle with Difficulties 78
Chap. XXV. On the same Subject — 82
Chap. XXVI. What the Law of Life is — 86
Chap. XXVII. Of the several Appearances to the Mind; and what Remedies are to be provided for them — 88
Chap. XXVIII. That we are not to be angry with Mankind.
What Things are little, what great, among Men 93
Chap, XXIX. Of Intrepidity — 98
Chap. XXX. What we ought to have ready, in difficult Circumstances. — — 107
B O O K II.
Chap. I. That Courage is not inconfishent with Caution 109
Chap. II. Of Tranquillity
Chap. III. Concerning Such as recommend Persons to the Philosophers 120
Chap. IV. Concerning a Person who had been guilty of Adultery 121
Chap.

CONTENTS. XXX	vii
Chap. V. How Magnanimity may be confishent with C	are
Page 1	123
J D	28
Chap. VII. Of Divination 1	32
Chap. VIII. Wherein confists the Essence of Good 1	34
Chap. IX. That when we are unable to fulfil what the C	baracter of a Man promises, we assume that of a Philosop	ber
	38
Chap. X. How we may investigate the Duties of Life fr 42.
Chap. XI. What the Beginning of Philosophy is I	46
Chap. XII. Of Disputation I	49
	5.3
Chap. XIV. Concerning Naso 1	58
Chap. XV. Concerning Those, who obstinately persevere	in what they have determined 1	62
Chap. XVI. That we do not study to make use of the Prin	ci-
ples concerning Good and Evil 1	65
Chap. XVII. How to adapt Pre-conceptions to particular	lar
Ca/es 1	73
	nı-
	79
Chap. XIX. Concerning Those, who embrace Philosophy only	in 33
01 0 1 7 1 1 1	90
	6
Chap. XXII. Of Friendship 20
Chap. XXIII. Of the Faculty of Speaking 20	7
Chap. XXIV. Concerning a Person, whom he treated with Di regard

Chap. XXV. That Logic is necessary

Chap. XXVI. What is the Property of Errors in Life xxxviii Contents.

219

BOOK III.

Chap. I. Of Finery in Dress Page 222
Chap. II. In what a Proficient ought to be exercised: and that we neglect the principal Things 231 Chap. III. What is the Subject-matter to a good Man; and in what we chiefly ought to be Practitioners 234
Chap. IV. Concerning one, who exerted himself with indecent Eagerness in the Theatre 237
Chap. V. Concerning those who pretend Sickness, as an Excuse to return Home 239
Chap, VI. Miscellaneous 242
Chap. VII. Concerning a Governor of the Free States, who was an Epicurean 244
Chap. VIII. How we are to exercise ourselves against the Appearances of Things 249
Chap. IX. Concerning a certain Orator, who was going to Rome on a Law Suit 251
Chap. X. In what Manner we ought to bear Sickness 254
Chap. XI. Miscellaneous 258
Chap. XII. Of ascetic Exercise 259
Chap. XIII. What Solitude is; and what a folitary Person 263
Chap. XIV. Miscellaneous - 267
Chap. XV. That every Thing is to be undertaken with Cir-cumspection 268
Chap. XVI. That Caution is necessary in Condescension and Complaifance 271
Chap. XVII. Of Providence 273
Chap. XVIII. That we ought not to be alarmed by any News that is brought us 27;
Chap. XIX. What is the Condition of the Vulgar: and what,
of a Philosopher 276
Chap. XX. That some Advantage may be gained from every external Circumflance 277
4 Chap.

Chap. XXI. Concerning those, who readily set up for S	ophilts
	e 280
Chap. XXII. Of the Cynic Philosophy	284
Chap. XXIII. Concerning fuch as read, and dispute, of	Ienta-
tiously	304
Chap. XXIV. That we ought not to be affected by	Things not in our own Power	310
Chap. XXV. Concerning Those, who desist from their P.	urpose
4	330
Chap. XXVI. Concerning Those, who are in Dread of	Want 332
BOOK IV.
Class I Of Familian
Chap. II. Of Freedom	339
Chap. II. Of Complaifance	368
Chap. III. What Things are to be exchanged for others	370
Chap. IV. Concerning Those, who earnestly desire a L
Repose Chap. V. Concerning the Quarrelsome, and Ferocious	372 380
Chap. V. Concerning the Quarteyome, and Terotions Chap. VI. Concerning Those, who grieve at being pitied	387
Chap. VII. Of Fearless	394
Chap. VIII. Concerning Such, as hastily run into the philo
Drefs — — —	401
Chap. IX. Concerning a Person, who was grown immodest Chap. X. What Things we are to despise, and on wh place a distinguished Value —	412
Chap. XI. Of Purity and Cleanliness —	418
Chap. XII. Of Attention — —	424
Chap. XIII. Concerning Such, as readily discover their Affairs — — —	428
The Enchiripion —	•
	435
FRAGMENTS	467
INDEX.
APPENDIX.

ARRIAN

T O

LUCIUS GELLIUS

Wisheth all Happiness.

INEITHER composed the Discourses of Epistetus in such a manner, as Things of this Nature are commonly composed: nor did I myself produce them to public View, any more than I composed them. But whatever Sentiments I heard from his own Mouth, the very same I endeavoured to set down in the very same Words, as far as possible, and preserve as Memorials, for my own Use, of his Manner of Thinking, and Freedom of Speech.

THESE Difcourses are such as one Person would naturally deliver from his own Thoughts, extempore, to another: not such as he would prepare to be read by Numbers afterwards. Yet, notwithstanding this, I cannot tell how, without either my Consent or Knowlege, they have fallen into the Hands of the Public. But it is of little Consequence to me, if I do not appear an able Writer: and of none to Epitletus, if any ŧ.

ARRIAN to LUCIUS GELLIUS.

one treats his Difcourfes (a) with Contempt; fince it was very evident, even when he uttered them, that he aimed at nothing more than to excite his Hearers to Virtue. If they produce that one Effect, they have in them what, I think, philosophical Difcourfes ought to have. And should they fail of it, let the Readers, however, be affured, that when Epitteus himself pronounced them, his Audience could not help being affected in the very Manner he intended they should. If by themselves they have less Efficacy, perhaps it is my Fault, or perhaps it is unavoidable.

Farewell.

(a) His means the Composition, not the Subject-matter of them.

THE

DISCOURSES

O F

EPICTETUS.

BOOK I.

CHAPTER I.

Of the Things which are, and of those which are not, in our own Power.

F other Faculties, you will find no one that contemplates, or confequently approves or disapproves, itself. How far does the contemplative Power of Grammar extend?

As far as the Judging of Language.

Of Mufic?

As far as Judging of Melody.

В

Does

Does either of them contemplate itself, then? By no means.

Thus, for Inflance, when you are to write to your Friend, Grammar will tell you what to write: but whether you are to write to your Friend at all, or no, Grammar will not tell you. Thus Mufic, with regard to Tunes: but whether it be proper or improper, at any particular Time, to fing or play, Mufic will not tell you.

What will tell, then?

That which contemplates both itself and all other Things. And what is that?

The reasoning Faculty: for that alone is found to confider both itself, its Powers, its Value, and likewise all the rest. For what is it else that says Gold is beautiful? (for the Gold itself does not speak) Evidently that Faculty, which judges of the Appearances of Things (a). What else distinguishes Music, Grammar, the other Faculties, proves their Uses, and shows their proper Occasions?

Nothing but this.

§. 2. As it was fit then, this most excellent and superior Faculty alone, a right Use of the Appearances of Things, the Gods have placed in our own Power; but all other Matters, not in our Power. Was it because they would not? I rather think, that if they could, they had granted us these too: but they certainly could not. For, placed upon Earth, and confined to such a Body, and to such Companions, how was it possible that, in these Respects, we should not be hindered by Things without us?

⁽a) See Introduction, §. 7.

§. 3. But what fays Tupiter ?  O Epičletus, if it were poffible, I had made this little Body and Property of thine if free, and not liable to Hindrance. But now do not miftake: it is not thy own, but only a finer Mixture of Clay (b). Since, then, I could not (c) give thee this, I have given thee a certain Portion of myfelf: this Faculty of exerting the Powers of Purfuit and Avoidance (a), of the Defire and Aversion; and, in a Word, the Use of the Appearances of Things. Taking Care of this Point, and making what is thy own to consist in this, thou wilt never be restrained, never be hindered; thou wilt not groan, wilt not complain, wilt not flatter any one. How then! Do all these Advantages seem small to thee?" Heaven forbid!

§. 4. But now, when it is in our Power to take Care of one Thing, and to apply to one, we chuse rather to take Care of many, and to incumber ourselves with many; Body, Property, Brother, Friend, Child, and Slave; and, by this Multiplicity of Incumbrances, we are burdened and weighed down. Thus, when the Weather doth not happen to be fair for sailing, we sit screwing ourselves, and perpetually looking out.—Which Way is the Wind?—North.—What have

⁽b) The Sacred Writers also mention Man as made of Clay, Gen. ii. 7. γού x. 9. xxxiii. 6. Η συ λαθων χων πηλον, επλασας ζωον, xxxviii. 14.

⁽c) One would hope, from the Context, that Epitetus is here freaking only of a moral, not a natural Impossibility; an Impossibility arising merely from the present Constitution of Things. See Introduction, §. 17. See likewise B. II. chap. v. §. 5.

⁽d) See Introduction, §. 5.

we to do with that ?---When will the West blow ?---When itself, Friend, or Æolus pleases; for Jupiter has not made You Dispenser of the Winds, but Æolus.

§. 5. What then is to be done?

To make the best of what is in our Power, and take the rest as it naturally happens.

And how is that?

As it pleases God.

What, then, must I be the only one to lose my Head?

Why, would you have all the World, then, lose their Heads for your Consolation? Why are not you willing to stretch out your Neck, like Lateranus (e), when he was commanded by Nero to be beheaded? For, shrinking a little, after receiving a weak Blow, he stretched it out again. And before this, when Epaphroditus (f), the Freedman of Nero, interrogated him about the Conspiracy; "If I have a Mind" to say any thing, replied he, I will tell it to your Master."

⁽e) Plautius Lateranus, a Conful elect, was put to Death by the Command of Nero, for being privy to the Confpiracy of Pifo. His Execution was fo fudden, that he was not permitted to take Leave of his Wife and Children; but was hurried into a Place appropriated to the Punishment of Slaves, and there killed by the Hand of the Tribune Statius. He fuffered in obflinate Silence, and without making any Reproach to Statius, who was concerned in the fame Plot for which he himself was punished. TACITUS, L. XV. C. 60.

⁽f) Epopbroditus was the Master of Requests and Freedman of Nero, and the Master of Epitetus. He affisted Nero in killing himself; for which he was condemned to Death by Domitian. Suetonius in vital Neronits, c. 49. Domit. c. 14.

§. 6. What then should we have at hand upon such Occasions? Why what else but—what is mine, and what not mine; what is permitted me, and what not.—I must die:
and must I die groaning too?—Be fetter'd. Must it be lamenting too?—Exiled. And what hinders me, then, but that I may go smiling, and chearful, and serene?—"Be—"tray a Secret"—I will not betray it; for this is in my own Power.—"Then I will fetter you."—What do you say, Man? Fetter me? You will setter my Leg; but not Jupiter himself can get the better of my Choice (g): "I will "throw you into Prison: I will behead that paltry Body of "yours." Did I ever tell you, that I alone had a Head not liable to be cut off?——These Things ought Philosophers to study; these ought they daily to write; and in these to exercise themselves.

§. 7. Thrafeas (b) used to fay, "I had rather be killed "To-day, than banished To-morrow." But how did Rusia answer him? "If you prefer it as a heavier Missfor-"tune, how foolish a Preference! If as a lighter, who has ⁽g) See Introduction, §. 9.

⁽b) Thrafeas Pætus, a Stoic Philosopher, put to Death by Noro. He was Husband of Arria, so well known by that beautiful Epigram in Martial. The Expression of Tacius concerning him is remarkable: After the Murder of so many excellent Persons, Nero at last spread a Defive of cutting off Virtue itself, by the Execution of Thraseas Pætus and Bareas Scrauss. L. xvi. c. 21.

⁽i) Rafius was a Tufam of the Equestrian Order, and a Stoic Philosopher. When Vefpasium banished the other Philosophers, Rusius was alone excepted. UPTON.

- " put it in your Power? Why do not you study to be contented with what is allotted you?"
- §. 8. Well, and what faid Agrippinus (k), upon this Account? "I will not be a Hindrance to myself." Word was brought him, "Your Cause is trying in the Senate."—"Good "Luck attend it. But it is Eleven o'Clock" (the Hour when he used to exercise before bathing): "Let us go to "our Exercise." When it was over, a Messenger tells him, "You are condemned." To Banishment, says he, or Death? "To Banishment."—What of my Estate?——"It is not "taken away."—Well then, let us go as far as Aricia (l), and dine there.
- §. 9. This it is to have studied (m) what ought to be studied; to have rendered our Desires and Aversions incapable of being restrained, or incurred. I must die: if instantly, I will die instantly; if in a short time, I will dine strift; and when the Hour comes, then I will die. How? As becomes one who restores what is not his own.

⁽k) Agrippinus was banished by Nero, for no other Crime than the unfortunate Death of his Father, who had been causelessly killed by the Command of Tiberius: and this had furnished a Pretence for accusing him of hereditary Disloyalty. TACITUS, L. xvi. c. 28, 29.

⁽¹⁾ Aricia, a Town about fixteen Miles from Rome, which lay in his Road to Banishment.

⁽m) This chearful Readine's for Death, whenever appointed by Providence, is noble in a Chriftian, to whom dying is taking Poffelfion of Happine's. But in Stoics, who feem to form no Hope beyond the Grave, it had furely more Infentibility than true Bravery, and was indeed contrary to Nature.

CHAPTER II.

In what Manner, upon every Occasion, to preserve our Character.

§. 1. TO a reasonable Creature, that alone is insupportable which is unreasonable: but every thing reasonable may be supported. Stripes are not naturally insupportable.—"How so?"—See how the Spartans(a) bear whipping, after they have learned that it is a reasonable Thing. Hanging is not insupportable: for, as soon as a Man has taken it into his Head that it is reasonable, he goes and hangs (b) himself. In short, we shall sind by Observation, that no Creature is oppressed so much by any thing, as by what is unreasonable; nor, on the other hand, attracted to any thing so strongly, as to what is reasonable.

§. 2. But it happens that different Things are reasonable and unreasonable, as well as good and bad, advantageous and disadvantageous, to different Persons. On this Account, chiefly, we stand in need of a liberal Education, to teach

⁽a) The Spartaus, to make a Trial of the Fortitude of their Children, used to have them publicly whipt at the Altar of Diana; and often with so much Severity, that they expired. The Boys supported this Exercise with so much Constancy, as never to cry out, nor even groan. UPTON From Cicero, &cc.

⁽b) The Supposition made by Episletus, that it may be reasonable, fometimes, for Perions to kill themselves, is a strong and alarming Inflance of the great Necessity of being careful, not only in general to form just and distinct Ideas of reasonable and unreasonable, but to apply them properly to particular Subjects; since such a Man as He, failed in so inportant a Case, at the very time when he was giving Cautions to others.

us to adapt the Preconceptions of reasonable and unreasonable to particular Cases, conformably to Nature. But to judge of reasonable, and unreasonable, we make use not only of a due Estimation of Things without us, but of what relates to each Person's particular Character. Thus, it is reasonable for one Man to submit to a dirty (c) disgraceful Office, who confiders this only, that if he does not submit to it, he shall be whipt, and lose his Dinner; but if he does, that he has nothing hard or disagreeable to suffer: Whereas to another it appears insupportable, not only to fubmit to fuch an Office himfelf, but to bear with any one else who does. If you ask me, then, whether you shall do this dirty Office or not, I will tell you, it is a more valuable Thing to get a Dinner, than not; and a greater Difgrace to be whipt, than not to be whipt: So that, if you measure yourfelf by these Things, go and do your Office.

" Ay, but this is not fuitable to my Character."

It is You who are to confider that, not I: For it is you who know yourfelf, what Value you fet upon yourfelf, and at what Rate you fell yourfelf: for different People fell themselves at different Prices.

§. 3. Hence Agrippinus (d), when Florus was confidering whether he should go to Nero's Shows, fo as to perform some Part in them himself, bid him go.---" But why do not

⁽c) The Translation here gives only the general Sense, as a more particular Description would be scarcely supportable in our Language.

⁽d) Nero was remarkably fond of Theatrical Entertainments; and ufed to introduce upon the Stage the Defeendants of noble Families, whom Want had rendered venal. Tacitus, L. xiv. c. 14.

"you go then?" fays Florus. "Because, replied Agrippinus, "I do not deliberate about it." For he who once fets himfelf about fuch Confiderations, and goes to calculating the Worth of external Things, approaches very near to those who forget their own Character. For, why do you ask me whether Death or Life be the more eligible? I answer, Life. Pain or Pleasure? I answer, Pleasure .--- "But if I do not " act a Part, I shall lose my Head." --- Go and act it then, but I will not .-- " Why?" --- Because you esteem yourself only as one Thread of many that make up the Piece.----"What then?" --- You have nothing to care for, but how to be like the rest of Mankind, as one Thread defires not to be diffinguished from the others. But I would be the Purple (e), that small and shining Thing, which gives a Lustre and Beauty to the rest. Why do you bid me resemble the Multitude then? At that Rate, how shall I be the Purple?

§. 4. This Priscus Helvidius (f) too saw, and acted accordingly: For when Vespasian had sent to forbid his going to the Senate, he answered, " It is in your Power to prevent " my continuing a Senator; but while I am one, I must go." " --- Well then, at least be filent there." --- " Do not ask my " Opinion, and I will be filent." --- "But I must ask it." ---

C

⁽e) An Allusion to the purple Border, which distinguished the Dress of the Roman Nobility.

⁽f) Helvidius Prifcus was no less remarkable for his Learning and Philosophy, than for the Sanctity of his Manners and the Love of his Country. He behaved however with too much Haughtinefs, on feveral Occasions, to Felhalian, who fentenced him to Death with great Reluctance and even forbad the Execution, when it was too late. Surven.

The Discourses of Book I.

" And I must speak what appears to me to be right."---

IO

- "But if you do, I will put you to Death."— "Did I ever tell you that I was immortal? You will do your Part,
- " and I mine: It is yours to kill, and mine to die intrepid; yours to banish me, mine to depart untroubled."
- §. 5. What Good, then, did Prifcus do, who was but a fingle Person? Why, what good does the Purple do to the Garment? What, but the being a shining Character in himfelf (g), and setting a good Example to others? Another, perhaps, if in such Circumstances Cassar had forbidden his Going to the Senate, would have answered, "I am obliged "to you for excussing me." But such a one he would not have forbidden to go: well knowing, that he would either sit like a Statue; or, if he spoke, he would ay what he knew to be agreeable to Cassar, and would overdo it by adding still more.
- §. 6. Thus acted even a Wreftler, who was in Danger of Death, unless he confented to an ignominious Amputation. His Brother, who was a Philosopher, coming to him, and faying, "Well, Brother, what do you defign to do? Let us "cut away this morbid Part, and return again to the Field." He refused, and courageously died.
- §. 7. When it was asked, whether he acted thus as a Wreftler, or a Philosopher? I answer, As a Man, said Epictetus; but as a Man who had been proclaimed a Champion at

4

the

⁽g) Αυτω in the Original refers to ιματιω; but the Figure would have appeared harfh in the Translation.

the Olympic Games; who had been used to such Places, and not exercised merely in the School of Baio (b). Another would have had his very Head cut off, if he could have lived without it. This is that Regard to Character, so powerful with those who are accustomed to introduce it, from their own Breasts, into their Deliberations.

§. 8. "Come now, Epitletus, take off your Beard (i)."— If I am a Philosopher, I answer, I will not take it off.— "Then I will take off your Head."—If that will do you any Good, take it off.

§. 9. It was asked, How shall each of us perceive what belongs to his Character? Whence, replied Epicterus, does a Bull, when the Lion approaches, perceive his own Qualifications (k), and expose himself alone for the whole Herd? It is evident, that with the Qualifications, occurs, at the same time, the Consciousness of being induced with them. And in the same manner, whoever of Us hath such Qualifications, will not be ignorant of them. But neither is a Bull, nor a gallant-spirited Man, formed all at once. We are to exercise and qualify ourselves, and not to run rashly upon what doth not concern us.

(b) Bato was a famous Master of the Olympic Exercises. UPTON.

⁽i) Domitian ordered all the Philosophers to be banished. To avoid this Inconvenience, those who had a Mind to disguise their Profession, sook off their Beards. UPTON.

⁽k) This Term was used, among the Stoics, to express the natural or acquired Powers necessary to the Performance of any Action.

§. 10. Only confider at what Price you fell your own Will and Choice, Man (l): If for nothing elfe, that you may not fell it for a Trifle. Greatness indeed, and Excellence, perhaps belong to others, to such as Socrates.

Why then, as we are born with a like Nature, do not all, or the greater Number, become fuch as he?

⁽¹⁾ See Introduction, §. 9.

⁽m) This is a difficult Place. The Text, as it stands now, is Επιπτισε πρεσσων Σωκρατου σει εξειν. α δε μη, συ χαρουν τουτο μοι εκανο εξειν. Which must be translated, Epicetus & not inferior to Socrates: But if not; be is not inferior, and this is enough for me. By a Change in the Pointing, it might perhaps be translated, but if be is not inferior, this is enough for me. And sometimes the Stoics considered themselves as not inferior to the Deity. See lib. 1. c. xii. §, 2. But neither of these Renderings makes a proper Connexion. I have therefore adventured to suppose, that πρεσσων and χαρων have changed Places; that σων hath arisen sirom a casual Repetition of the two last Letters of Σωκρατου; and that με συ is the Remainder of some proper Name known: perhaps Μελιτου, as he was one of the Accusers of Socrates: which cannot now be known. This will give the Sense which I have expressed, and it is the only unexceptionable one that I can find.

CHAPTER III.

How, from the Doctrine that God is the Father of Mankind, we may proceed to its Confequences.

§. 1. If a Person could be persuaded of this Principle as he ought, that we are all originally descended from God, and that He is the Father of Gods and Men; I conceive he never would think meanly or degenerately concerning himself. Suppose Cæsar were to adopt you, there would be no bearing your haughty Looks: And will you not be elated on knowing yourfelf to be the Son of Jupiter? Yet, in Fact, we are not elated. But having two Things in our Composition, intimately united, a Body in common with the Brutes, and Reason and Sentiment in common with the Gods; many incline to this unhappy and mortal Kindred, and only fome few to the divine and happy one. And, as of Necessity every one must treat each particular Thing, according to the Notions he forms about it; fo those few, who think they are made for Fidelity, Decency, and a wellgrounded Use of the Appearances of Things, never think meanly or degenerately concerning themselves. But with the Multitude the Case is contrary: " For what am I? A " poor contemptible Man, with this miferable Flesh of mine!" Miserable indeed. But you have likewise something better than this paultry Flesh. Why then, overlooking that, doyou pine away in Attention to this?

§. 2. By means of this [animal] Kindred, fome of us, deviating towards it, become like Wolves, faithlefs, and infidious.

infidious, and mischievous: others, like Lions, wild, and savage, and untamed: but most of us Foxes, and Wretches even among Brutes. For what else is a slanderous and illnatured Man, than a Fox, or something yet more wretched and mean? See then, and take heed, that you do not become such Wretches.

CHAPTER IV.

Of Improvement.

§. 1. He who is entering on a State of Improvement, having learnt from the Philosophers, that the Object of Desire is Good, of Aversion, Evil; and having learnt too, that Prosperity and Ease are no otherwise attainable by Man, than in not being disappointed of his Desire, nor incurring his Aversion: such an one removes totally from himself and postpones Desire (a), and applies Aversion only to Things dependent on Choice. For if he should be averse to Things independent on Choice; he knows, that he must sometimes incur his Aversion, and be unhappy. Now if Virtue promises Happiness, Prosperity, and Ease; then, an Improvement in Virtue is certainly an Improvement in each of these. For to whatever Point the Persection of any thing absolutely brings us, Improvement is always an Approach towards it.

§ 2. How happens it then, that when we confess Virtue to be fuch, yet we feek, and make an oftentatious Show of Improvement in other Things? What is the Bufiness of Virtue?

⁽a) See Enchiridion, c. ii. Note (b).

A prosperous Life.

Who is in a State of Improvement then? He who hathread the many Treatifes of Chryspopus (b)? Why, doth Virtue consist in having read Chryspopus through? If it doth, Improvement is confessedly nothing essential agreat deal of Chryspopus: otherwise we confess Virtue to produce one Thing; and declare Improvement, which is an Approach to it, to be quite another Thing.

§. 3. This Perfon, fays one [of you], is already able to read Chryfippus, by himfelf. ——" Certainly, Sir, you have "made a vaft Improvement!" What Improvement? Why do you ridicule him? Why do you withdraw him from a Senfe of his Misfortunes? Why do not you show him the Busines of Virtue, that he may know where to feek Improvement? ——Seek it there, Wretch, where your Business lies. And where doth your Business lie? In Desire and Aversion; that you may neither be disappointed of the one, nor incur the other: in exerting the Powers of Purfuit and Avoidance, that you may not be liable to fail; in Assent and Suspense; that you may not be liable to be deceived. The first and most necessary is the first Topic (c). But if you seek to avoid incurring your Aversion, trembling and lamenting all the while, at this rate how do you improve?

⁽b) Chryffppus is called, by Cicero, the most subtile Interpreter of the Stoic Dreams, and the Support of the Portico. He composed 705 Volumes; which is not very wonderful, as he was so fond of Quotations, that in one of his Pieces he transcribed almost an entire Play of Euri-pides. His chief Study was Logic, which he carried to a trisling Degree of Subtilty. There is nothing now remaining of his Works but some of their Titles. He died about 200 Years before the Christian Era, and was honoured by the Alberians with a Statue in the Ceromicus. His Death is faid to have been occasioned by an immoderate Fit of Laughing, at seeing an AS cast Figs. Chrysfppus defired the AS might have a Glas of Wine to wash them down; and was so diverted with his own Conceit, that it cost him his Life. He is faid to have been a very copious and aborious Writer, but obscure and immoral; tho one would be inclined to think, from the Respect with which he is mentioned by Episteus, that this latter Accusation was groundless.

§. 4. Show me then your Improvement in this Point. As it I should fay to a Wrestler, Show me your Shoulders; ahe she should answer me, "See my Poisers."——Do you and your Poisers look to that: I desire to see the Effect of them.

" Take the Treatise on the Subject of the active Powers,

" and fee how throughly I have perused it."

I do not inquire into this, Wretch: but how you exert those Powers; how you manage your Desires and Aversions, how your Intentions and Purposes; how you are prepared for Events, whether conformably or contrary to Nature. If conformably, give me Evidence of that, and I will say you improve: if contrary, go your way, and not only comment on these Treatises, but write such yourself; and what Service will it do you? Do not you know that the whole Volume is fold for Half a Crown? Doth he who comments upon it, then, value himself at more than Half a Crown? Never look for your Business in one Thing, and for Improvement in another.

Where is Improvement, then?

⁽c) See Introduction, §. 4, 5, 6.

If any of you, withdrawing himself from Externals, turns to his own Faculty of Choice, to exercise, and finish, and render it conformable to Nature; elevated, free, unreftrained, unhindered, faithful, decent: if he hath learnt too, that whoever defires, or is averfe to, Things out of his own Power, can neither be faithful nor free, but must necessarily be changed and toffed up and down with them; must necessarily too be subject to others, to such as can procure or prevent what he defires or is averse to: if, rising in the Morning, he obferves and keeps to these Rules; bathes and eats as a Man. of Fidelity and Honour; and thus, on every Subject of Action, exercifes himself in his principal Duty; as a Racer, in the Bufiness of Racing; as a public Speaker, in the Bufiness of exercising his Voice: this is he, who truly improves; this is he, who hath not travelled in vain. But if he is wholly intent on reading Books, and hath laboured that Point only, and travelled (d) for that: I bid him go home immediately, and not neglect his domestic Affairs; for what he travelled for, is nothing. The only real Thing is, studying how to rid his Life of Lamentation, and Complaint, and Alas! and I am undone, and Misfortune, and Disappointment; and to learn what Death, what Exile, what Prison, what Poison is: That he may be able to fay in a Prifon, like Socrates, " My dear Crito; if it thus pleases the Gods, thus let it be;" and not-" Wretched old Man, have I kept my grey Hairs " for this!" Who speaks thus? Do you suppose I will name fome mean and despicable Person? Is it not Priam who fays it? Is it not Oedipus? Nay, how many Kings fay it? For what else is Tragedy, but the Sufferings of Men, struck by an Admiration of Externals, represented in that Kind of Poetry? If one was to be taught by Fistions, that Externals independent upon Choice are nothing to us; I, for my Part, should wish for such a Fistion, as that, by which I might live prosperously and undisturbed. What you wish for, it is your Bussiness to consider.

⁽d) An Allufion to the antient Custom among Philosophers, of trawelling into foreign Countries, for Improvement.

§. 5. Of what Service, then, is Chrysippus to us?

(e) To teach you, that those Things are not false, on which Prosperity and Ease depend. "Take my Books, and "you will see, how true and conformable to Nature those "Things are, which render me easy." How great a Happiness! And how great the Benefactor, who shows the Way! To Triptolemus all Men have raised Temples and Altars, because he gave us a milder Kind of Food; but to him who hath discovered, and brought to Light, and communicated, the Truth to all (f); the Means, not of living, but

⁽c) What ought to be our Difpofitions towards Good and Evil, may be learned from Philofophy: but what that certainly-attainable Good, and that Evil which, without our own Faults, we need never incur, are, Chriftianity alone can teach. That alone can enable us to unite the Wifdom, Courage, Dignity, and Compositre of the Stoics, with the Humility that belongs to our frail Nature, and the various Affections that are infeparable from Humanity.

⁽f) Epitletta freaks with great Thankfulneß to Heaven on the Account of Chrylippua, a fubtile and perplexed Writer, from whose Instructions, only a few fludious abstracted Persons could derive any Benefit.
11ow much stronger ought to be the Gratitude of those, who are blessed with but of living well; who among you ever raifed an Altar or a Temple, or dedicated a Statue, or who worships God on that Account? We offer Sacrifices on the Account of those [Benefactors] who have given us Corn and the Vine; and shall we not give Thanks to God, for those who have produced that Fruit in the human Understanding, by which they proceed to discover to us the true Doctrine of Happines ?

CHAPTER V.

Concerning the Academics (a).

§. 1. If any one opposes very evident Truths, it is not easy to find a Reason which may persuade him, to alter his Opinion. This arises neither from his own Strength, nor from the Weakness of his Teacher: but when, after being driven upon an Absurdity, he becomes petrefied, how shall we deal with him any longer by Reason?

§. 2. Now there are two Sorts of Petrefaction: The one, a Petrefaction of the Understanding; the other, of the Sense of Shame, when a Person hath obtinately set himself not to assent to evident Truths, nor to quit the Desence of Conwith the Knowlege of Him, who hath brought Life and Immortality to Light (the Word is the fame in Epitletus and St. Paul); who hath readered the Way to Virtue and to Happines not only intelligible, but accefible, to all Mankind; and who is Himfelf the Way, the Truth, and the Life.

⁽a) The Academies held, that there is nothing to be known; that we have not Faculties to diffinguish between Truth and Falshood; and their Custom was neither to affirm nor deny any thing.

tradictions. We all dread a bodily Mortification; and would make use of every Contrivance to avoid it: but none of us is troubled about a Mortification in the Soul. And yet, indeed, even with regard to the Soul, when a Person is so affected, as not to apprehend or understand any thing, we think him in a sad Condition: but where the Sense of Shame and Modesty is under an absolute Mortification, we go so far, as even to call this, Strength of Mind (b).

§. 3. Are you certain that you are awake? --- " I am not " (replies fuch a Person): for neither am I certain, when, in "dreaming, I appear to myself to be awake."--- Is there no Difference, then, between these Appearances?---" None."---Shall I argue with this Man any longer? For what Steel or what Caustic can I apply, to make him fensible of his Mortification? He is fenfible of it; and pretends not to be fo. He is even worse than dead. Doth not he see the Repugnancy of contradictory Propositions? He sees it; and is never the better. He is neither moved, nor improves. Nay, he is in a yet worse Condition: his Sense of Shame and Modesty is utterly extirpated. His reasoning Faculty indeed is not extirpated; but turned wild and favage. Shall I call this, Strength of Mind? By no means: unless we allow it be fuch in the vileft Debauchées, publicly to fpeak and act whatever comes into their Heads.

⁽b) A Sceptic was held to be an Esprit fort.

CHAPTER VI.

Of Providence.

§.1. ROM every Event that happens in the World, it is easy to celebrate Providence, if a Person hath but these two Circumstances in himself; a Faculty of considering what happens to each Individual, and a grateful Temper. Without the first, he will not perceive the Usefulness of Things which happen: and without the other, he will not be thankful for them. If God had made Colours, and had not made the Faculty of seeing them, what would have been their Use?

None.

On the contrary, if he had made the Faculty, withour fuch Objects as fall under its Observation, what would have been the Use of that?

None.

Again: If he had formed both the Faculty and the Objects, but had not made Light?

Neither in that Cafe would they have been of any Ufe.

§. 2. Who is it then that hath fitted each of these to the other? Who is it that hath fitted the Sword to the Scabbard, and the Scabbard to the Sword? Is it no one? From the very Construction of a complete Work, we are used to declare positively, that it must be the Operation of some Artificer, and not the Effect of mere Chance. Doth every such Work, then, demonstrate an Artisicer; and do not visible Objects, and the Sense of Seeing, and Light, demonstrate one?

- one? Doth not the Difference of the Sexes, and their Inclination to each other, and the Use of their several Powers; do not these Things, neither, demonstrate an Artificer?

 Most certainly they do.
- §. 3. But farther: This Constitution of Understanding, by which we are not simply impressed by sensible Objects; but take and substract from them; and add and composite formething out of them; and pass from some to others absolutely remote (a): Is not all this, neither, sufficient to prevail on some Men, and make them assamed of leaving an Artificer out of their Scheme? If not, let them explain to us what it is that effects each of these; and how it is possible that Things so wonderful, and which carry such Marks of Contrivance, should come to pass spontaneously, and without Design.

What, then, do these Things come to pass for our Service only?

Many for ours only; fuch as are peculiarly necessary for a reasonable Creature: but you will find many, common to us with mere Animals.

Then, do they too understand what is done?

Not at all: For Use is one Affair, and Understanding another. But God had Need of Animals, to make use of the Appearances of Things (b); and of Us to understand that Use. It is sufficient, therefore, for them to eat, and drink, and sleep, and continue their Species, and perform other such Offices as belong to each of them: but to us, to whom

(b) See Introduction, §. 7.

⁽a) The Translation follows ουδαμως in Mr. Upton's Addenda.

he hath given likewise a Faculty of Understanding, these Offices are not sufficient. For if we do not ast in a proper and orderly Manner, and suitably to the Nature and Constitution of each Thing; we shall no longer attain our End. For where the Constitution of Beings is different, their Offices and Ends are different likewise. Thus where the Constitution is adapted only to Use, there Use is alone sufficient: But where Understanding is added to Use, unless that too be duely exercised, the End of such a Being will never be attained.

- §. 4. Well then: each of the Animals is conflituted either for Food, or Hufbandry, or to produce Milk; and the reft of them for fome other like Ufe; and for these Purposes what need is there of understanding the Appearances of Things, and being able to make Distinctions concerning them? But God hath introduced Man, as a Spectator of Himself, and his Works; and not only as a Spectator, but an Interpreter of them. It is therefore shameful that Man should begin, and end, where irrational Creatures do. He is indeed rather to begin there, but to end where Nature itself hath fixt our End; and that is in Contemplation, and Understanding, and in a Scheme of Life conformable to Nature.
- §. 5. Take care, then, not to die without being Spectators of these Things. You take a Journey to Olympia to behold the Work (c) of Phidias, and each of you thinks it a Misfortune to die without a Knowlege of such Things: and will you have no Inclination to understand, and be Spectators of those Works, for which there is no need to take a Journey; but which are ready and at hand, even to those who bestow no Pains (a)! Will you never perceive, then, either what you are, or for what you were born; nor for what Purpose you are admitted Spectators of this Sight?

⁽c) The famous Statue of Jupiter Olympius.

But there are fome Things unpleasant and difficult, in Life.

And are there none at Olympia? Are not you heated? Are not you crouded? Are not you without good Conveniences for bathing (e)? Are not you wet through, when it happens to rain? Do not you bear Uproar, and Noife, and other difagreeable Circumstances? But I suppose, by comparing all these with the Advantage of seeing so valuable a Sight, you support and go through them. Well: and [in the present Case] have not you received Faculties by which you may support every Event? Have not you received Greatness of Soul? Have not you received a manly Spirit? Have not you received Patience? What signifies to me any thing that happens, while I have a Greatness of Soul? What shall disconcert or trouble or appear grievous to me? Shall I not make use of my Faculties, to that Purpose for which they were granted me; but lament and groan at what happens?

§. 6. Oh, but my Nose (f) runs.

to intimate, that others commonly made are little less so. See M. Antoninus, 1. viii. §. 50. of Gataker's Edition and the Glafgovo Translation.

And

⁽d) The Translation follows a conjectural Emendation of Mr. Upton's on this Paffage.

⁽c) It was one Part of the Elegance of those Times, to bathe every Day.

(f) Episteus probably introduces this ridiculous Complaint, in order in intimate, that others compount, made are little left. See Nov. M. Auro.

And what have you Hands for, Beaft, but to wipe it? But was there then any good Reason, that there should be fuch a dirty Thing in the World?

And how much better is it that you should wipe your Nose, than complain? Pray, what Figure do you think Hercules would have made, if there had not been such a Lion, and a Hydra, and a Stag, and unjust and brutal Men; whom he expelled and cleared away? And what would he have done, if none of these had existed? Is it not plain, that he must have wrapt himself up and slept? In the first place, then, he would never have become a Hercules, by slumbering away his whole Life in such Delicacy and Ease: or if he had, what Good would it have done? What would have been the Use of his Arm, and the rest of his Strength; of his Patience, and Greatness of Mind; if such Circumstances and Subjects of Action had not roused and exercised him?

What then, must we provide these Things for ourselves; and introduce a Boar, and a Lion, and a Hydra, into our Country?

This would be Madness and Folly. But as they were in being, and to be met with, they were proper Subjects to set off and exercise Hercules. Do you therefore likewise, being sensible of this, inspect the Faculties you have: and after taking a View of them, say, "Bring on me now, O Jupiter, what Difficulty "Thou wilt, for I have Faculties granted me by Thee, and "Abilities by which I may acquire Honour and Ornament to "mystelf."—No: but you sit trembling, for sear this or that should happen: and lamenting, and mourning, and groaning at what doth happen; and then you accuse the Gods. For what is the Consequence of such a Meanspiritedness, but Impiety?

piety? And yet God hath not only granted us these Faculties, by which we may bear every Event, without being depressed or broken by it; but, like a good Prince, and a true Father, hath rendered them incapable of Restraint, Compulsion, or Hindrance, and intirely dependent on our own Pleasure: nor hath he reserved a Power, even to himself, of hindering or restraining them. Having these Things free, and your own, will you make no Use of them, nor consider what you have received, nor from whom? But sit groaning and lamenting, some of you, blind to him who gave them, and not acknowleging your Benefactor; and others, basely turning yourselves to Complaints and Accusations of God? Yet I undertake to flow you, that you have Qualifications and Occasions for Greatness of Soul, and a manly Spirit: but what Occasions you have to find Fault, and complain, do you show me.

CHAPTER VII.

Of the Use of convertible and hypothetical Propositions, and the like.

§. 1. It (a) is a Secret to the Vulgar, that the Practice of Convertible, and hypothetical, and interrogatory Arguments, and, in general, of all other logical Forms, hath any Relation to the Duties of Life. For, in every Subject of Action, the Question is, how a wife and good Man may find a Way of extricating himself, and a Method of Behaviour conformable to his Duty upon the Occasion. Let them say,

⁽a) It is but fair to warn the Reader, that little Entertainment is to be expected from this Chapter, which is wholly logical.
there-

therefore, either that the Man of Virtue will not engage in Questions and Answers; or that, if he doth, he will not think it worth his Care whether he behaves rashly and at hazard in questioning and answering: or if they allow neither of these; it is necessary to confess, that some Examination ought to be made of those Topics, in which the Affair of Question and Answer is principally concerned. For what is the Profession of Reasoning? To lay down true Positions; to reject false ones; and to suspend the Judgment in doubtful ones. Is it enough, then, to have learned merely this?---It is enough, fay you .--- Is it enough, then, for him who would not commit any Mistake in the Use of Money, merely to have heard, that we are to receive the good Pieces, and reject the bad ?---This is not enough: ---What must be added befides?---That Faculty which tries and diffinguishes what Pieces are good, what bad .--- Therefore, in Reasoning too, what hath been already faid is not enough: but it is necessary that we should be able to prove and distinguish between the true, and the falfe, and the doubtful .--- It is necessary.

§. 2. And what farther is professed in Reasoning?——To admit the Consequence of what you have properly granted.——It is not; but we must learn how such a Thing is the Consequence of such another; and when one Thing follows from one Thing, and when from many Things in common. Is it not moreover necessary, that he, who would behave skilled in Reasoning, should both himself demonstrate whatever he delivers, and be able to comprehend the Demonstrations of others; and not be deceived by such as sophisticate, as if they were demonstrating. Hence, then, the Employment and Exercise of concluding Arguments and Figures. arises; and appears to be necessary.

§. 3. But it may possibly happen, that from the Premises: which we have properly granted, there arises some Consequence, which, though false, is nevertheless a Consequence. What then ought I to do? To admit a Falsehood?----And how is that possible?---Well: or to fay that my Concessions were not properly made?----But neither is this allowed----Or that the Confequence doth not arise from the Premises? ---Nor is even this allowed .--- What then is to be done in the Case?--- Is it not this? As the having once borrowed Money, is not enough to make a Person a Debtor, unless he still continues to owe Money, and hath not paid it: fo the having granted the Premises, is not enough to make it necessary to grant the Inference, unless we continue our Concessions. If the Premises continue to the End, such as they were when the Concessions were made, it is absolutely necessary to continue: the Concessions, and to admit what follows from them. if the Premises do not continue such as they were when the Concession was made, it is absolutely necessary to depart from the Concession, and admit [rather the contrary I mean] what doth not (b) follow from the Argument itself. For

⁽b) The Paffage feems to require that ανακολυθον should be ακολυθον s. We are to depart from the Concellion, and admit abat follows from the Argument iffelf: The Meaning I apprehend to be, that if, in the Courfe of an Argument, our Opponent fophilically alters the State of the Queffion on which our Conceflions were founded, it is lawful to revoke those Concellions, and admit no Confequence but what is fairly drawn from the Argument itself.

this Inference is no Confequence of ours, nor belongs to us, when we have departed from the Conceffion of the Premifes. We ought then to examine these Kinds of Premises, and their Changes and Conversions, on which any one, by laying hold, either in the Question itself, or in the Answer, or in the fyllogistical Conclusion, or in any other thing of that fort, gives an Occasion to the Unthinking of being disconcerted, not foreseeing the Consequence.—Why so?—That in this Topic we may not behave contrary to our Duty, nor with Consistent.

§. 4. The same Thing is to be observed in Hypotheses and hypothetical Arguments. For it is fometimes necessary to require fome Hypothesis to be granted, as a kind of Step to the rest of the Argument. Is every given Hypothesis then to be granted, or not every one; and if not every one, which? And is he who has granted an Hypothesis, for ever to abide. by it? Or is he fometimes to depart from it, and admit only Confequences, but not to admit Contradictions?----Ay: but a Person may say, on your admitting the Hypothesis of a Possibility, I will drive you upon an Impossibility. With such a one as this, shall not the Man of Prudence engage; but avoid all Examination and Conversation with him?---And yet who, befides the Man of Prudence, is capable of treating an Argument, or who befides is fagacious in Questions and Answers, and incapable of being deceived and imposed on by Sophistry?----Or will he indeed engage, but without regarding: whether he behaves rashly and at hazard in the Argument?----Yet how then can be be fuch a one as we are fuppoling him? But, without some such Exercise and Preparation, is it possible for him to preserve himself consistent? Let them shew this: and all these Theorems will be superfluous and absurd, and unconnected with our Idea of the virtuous Man. Why then are we still indolent, and slothful, and sluggish, seeking Pretences of avoiding Labour? Shall we not be watchful to render Reason itself accurate?---" But suppose, after all, I " should make a Mistake in these Points: have I killed a "----Wretch! why, in this Case, where had you a Father to kill? What is it then that you have done? The only Fault that you could commit, in this Inflance, you have committed. This very Thing I myself said to Rufus, when he reproved me, for not finding fomething that was omitted in some Syllogism. Why, faid I, have I burnt the Capitol then? Wretch! answered he, was the Thing here omitted the Capitol? Or are there no other Faults, but burning the Capitol, or killing a Father? And is it no Fault to treat the Appearances prefented to our Minds rashly, and vainly, and at hazard; not to comprehend a Reason, nor a Demonstration, nor a Sophism; nor, in short, to see what is for, or against one's felf in a Question or Answer? Is nothing of all this any Fault?

CHAPTER VIII.

That Faculties are not fafe to the Uninstructed.

§.1. In as many Ways as equivalent Syllogisms may be varied, in fo many may the Forms of Arguments, and Enthymemas, be varied likewise. As for Instance:

If you have borrowed, and not paid, you owe me Money. But you have not borrowed, and not paid; therefore you do not owe me Money. To perform this skilfully, belongs to no one more than to a Philosopher. For if an Enthymema be amperfect Syllogism; he who is exercised in a perfect Syllogism, must be equally ready at an imperfect one.

3 you

(a) Why then do not we exercise ourselves and others, after

Because, even now, though we are not exercised in these Things, nor diverted, by me, at least, from the Study of Morality; yet we make no Advances in Virtue. What is to be expected then if we should add this Avocation too? Especially, as it would not only be an Avocation from more necessary Studies, but likewise a capital Occasion of Conceit and Infolence. For the Faculty of arguing, and of perfuafive Reasoning is great; and, particularly, if it be much laboured, and receive an additional Ornament from Rhetoric. For, in general, every Faculty is dangerous to weak and uninftructed Persons; as being apt to render them arrogant and elated. For by what Method can one perfuade a young Man, whoexcells in these Kinds of Study, that he ought not to be an Appendix to them, but they to him? Will he not trample upon all fuch Advice; and walk about elated, and puffed up, not bearing any one should touch him, to put him in mind, where he is wanting, and in what he goes wrong.

What then, was not Plate a Philosopher?

Well, and was not Hippocrates a Physician? Yet you see [how elegantly] he expresses himself. But is it in Quality of Physician, then, that he expresses himself so? Why do you confound Things, accidentally united, from different Causes, in the same Men? If Plato was handsome and well-made, must I too set myself to endeavour at becoming handsome and well-made; as if this was necessary to Philosophy, because a certain Person happened to be at once handsome and a Philosopher? Why will you not perceive and distinguish what are the Things that make Men Philosophers, and what belong to them on other Accounts? Pray, if I (b) were a Philosopher, would it be necessary that you should be lame too?

⁽a) This is spoken by one of the Audience.

§. 2. What then? Do I reject these Faculties? By no means. For neither do I reject the Faculty of Seeing. But if you ask me, what is the Good of Man; I have nothing else to say to you, but that it is a certain Regulation of the Choice, with regard to the Appearances of Things.

⁽b) Epitietus, whenever he has Occasion to mention himself, speaks with remarkable Modelty; and in a Stile very different from that of many of the more ancient Philosophers: as appears by the several arrogant Speeches recorded of them by Diagenes Laertius, &c. It is probable he might improve in this humble Disposition, by the Character of Secretars: which he seems particularly to have studied, and admired. Yet other Philosophers had studied and admired the same Character, without profiting by it. Perhaps the sober and unassimming Temper of Christianity might, from the Example of its Profession in those Days, have produced this, and other good Effects, in the Minds of many who knew little, if any thing, of the Osspel titels.

CHAPTER IX.

How from the Doctrine of our Kindred to God, we are to proceed to its Consequences.

§. 1. TF what Philosophers say of the Kindred between God and Man be true; what has any one to do, but, like Socrates, when he is asked what Countryman he is, never to fay that he is a Citizen of Athens, or of Corinth; but of the World? For why do you fay that you are of Athens: and not of that Corner only, where that paultry Body of yours was laid at its Birth? Is it not, evidently, from what is principal, and comprehends not only that Corner, and your whole House; but the general Extent of the Country, from which your Pedigree is derived down to you, that you call yourfelf an Athenian, or a Corinthian? Why may not he then, who understands the Administration of the World; and has learned that the greatest, and most principal, and comprehensive, of all Things, is this System, composed of Men and God: and that from Him the Seeds of Being are descended, not only to my Father or Grandfather, but to all Things that are produced and born on Earth; and especially to rational Natures, as they alone are qualified to partake of a Communication with the Deity, being connected with him by Reason: Why may not [such a one] call himself a Citizen of the World? Why not a Son of God? And, why shall he fear any thing that happens among Men? Shall Kindred to Cæfar, or any other of the Great at Rome, enable a Man to live fecure, above Contempt, and void of all Fear whatever: and shall not the having God for our W Maher.

Maker, and Father, and Guardian, free us from Griefs and Terrors ?

8. 2. " But how shall I subsist? For I have nothing."

Why, how do Slaves, how do Fugitives? To what do they truft, when they run away from their Masters? Is it to their Estates? Their Servants? Their Plate? To nothing but themselves. Yet they do not fail to get Necessaries. And must a Philosopher, think you, when he leaves his own Abode, rest and rely upon others; and not take care of himself? Must he be more helpless and anxious than the brute Beafts; each of which is felf-fufficient, and wants neither proper Food, nor any fuitable and natural Provision? One would think, there should be no Need for an old Fellow to fit here contriving, that you may not think meanly, nor entertain low and abject Notions of yourselves: but that his Business would be, to take care, that there may not happen to be [among you] young Men of fuch a Spirit, that, knowing their Affinity to the Gods; and that we are as it were fettered by the Body and its Possessions, and by so many other Things as are necessary, upon these Accounts, for the Oeconomy and Commerce of Life; they should resolve to throw them off, as both troublesome and useless, and depart to their Kindred.

§. 3. This is the Work, if any, that ought to employ your Mafter and Preceptor, if you had one: that you should come to him, and fay; " EpiEletus, we can no longer bear " being tied down to this paultry Body: feeding and reft-" ing, and cleaning it, and hurried about with fo many " low

"low Cares on its Account. Are not these Things indif"ferent, and nothing to us: and Death no Evil? Are not
"we Relations of God: and did we not come from him?
"Suffer us to go back thither from whence we came: suffer
"us, at length, to be delivered from these Fetters, that chain and weigh us down. Here, Thieves and Robbers, and Courts of Judicatures, and those who are called "Tyrants, seem to have some Power over us, on account of the Body and its Possessions. Suffer us to show them, that "they have no Power."

§. 4. And in this Case it would be my Part to answer:

"My Friends, wait for God, till he shall give the Signal,
"and distrils you from this Service: then return to him.
"For the present, be content to remain in this Post, where he has placed you. The Time of your Abode here, is, short, and easy to such as are disposed like you. For what Tyrant, what Robber, what Thief, or what Courts of Judicature are formidable to those, who thus account the Body, and its Possessions, as nothing? Stay. Depart not inconsiderately."

§. 5. Thus ought the Case to stand between a Preceptor and ingenuous young Men. But how stands it now? The Preceptor has no Life in him: you have none neither. When you have had enough To-day, you fit weeping about To-morrow, how you shall get Food. Why, if you have it, Wretch, you will have it: if not you will go out of Life. The Door is open: why do you lament? What room doth there remain for Tears? What Occasion for Flattery? Why should any one Person envy another? Why should he be struck with awful Admiration of those who have great Possessions, or are placed in high Rank, [as is common]? Especially, if they are powerful and passionate? For what will they do to us? The Things which they can do, we do not regard: the Things which we are concerned about, they cannot do. Who then, after all, shall command a Perfon thus disposed? How was Socrates affected by these Things? As it became one perfuaded of his being a Relation of the Gods. " should tell me (fays he to his Judges), we will acquit you, " upon Condition that you shall no longer discourse in the " Manner you have hitherto done, nor make any Disturbance " either among our young or our old People;" I would answer; "You are ridiculous in thinking, that if your " General had placed me in any Post, I ought to maintain " and defend it, and chuse to die a thousand times, rather " than defert it: but if God hath affigned me any Sta-" tion or Method of Life, that I ought to defert that for " you." (a) §. 6. This it is, for a Man to be truly a Relation of God. But we confider ourfelves as a mere Affemblage of Stomach and Entrails, and bodily Parts. Because we fear, because we defire; we flatter those who can help us in these Matters; we dread the very same Persons.

§. 7. A Person defired me once to write for him to Rome. He was one vulgarly eftermed unfortunate, as he had been formerly illustrious and rich, and afterwards stript of all his Possessing, and reduced to live here. I wrote for him in a submiffive Stile: but, after reading my Letter, he returned it to me, and said; "I wanted your Affistance, not your "Pity; for no Evil hath befallen me."

⁽a) Des nuces should probably be de vipace, and is so translated.

§, 8. (b) Thus Rufus, to try me, used to say, this or that you will have from your Mafter. When I answered him, these are [uncertain] human Affairs: Why then, says he, should I intercede with him (c), when you can receive these Things from yourself? For what one hath of his own, it is fuperfluous and vain to receive from another. Shall I then, who can receive Greatness of Soul and a manly Spirit from myfelf, receive an Estate, or a Sum of Money, or a Place, from you? Heaven forbid! I will not be so insensible of my own Possessions. But, if a Person is fearful and abject, what else is necessary, but to write Letters for him as if he was dead. " Pray oblige us with the Corpfe and Blood of fuch " a one." For, in fact, fuch a one is Corpfe and Blood; and nothing more. For, if he was any thing more, he would be fenfible, that one Man is not rendered unfortunate by another.

⁽b) This Paffage has great Difficulties, which I know not how to folve, any otherwise than by supposing something after $\alpha + \theta \xi \omega \pi i \nu \alpha$ to be lost.

⁽c) The Translator follows Mr. Upton's Conjecture in this Place, and: the French Version agrees with it.

CHAPTER X.

Concerning Those who strove for Preferments at Rome.

§ 1. If we all applied ourselves as heartily to our proper Business, as the old Fellows at Rome do to their Schemes; perhaps we too might make fome Proficiency. I know a Man older than I am, and who is now Superintendant of Provisions at Rome. When he past through this Place, on his Return from Exile, what an Account did he give me of his former Life! and how did he promife, that for the future, when he was got back, he would apply himfelf to nothing but how to spend the Remainder of his Days in Repose and Tranquillity. "For how few have I now remain-"ing!"---You will not do it, faid I. When you are once got within the Smell of Rome, you will forget all this: and, if you can but once gain Admittance to Court, you will (a) go in, heartily rejoiced, and thank God. " If you ever " find me, Epictetus, faid he, putting one Foot into the " Court, think of me whatever you pleafe." Now, after all, how did he act? Before he entered the City, he was met by a Billet from Cæfar. On receiving it, he forgot all his former Refolutions; and has ever fince been heaping up one Incumbrance upon another. I fhould be glad now, to have an Opportunity of putting him in mind of his Discourse upon the Road; and of faying, how much more clever a Prophet am I than you!

⁽a) Egeral probably should be Elglegal, and the French Translator feems to have followed, and made the fame Conjecture.

- §. 2. What then do I fay? that Man is made for an inactive Life? No, furely. "But why is not ours a Life of "Activity?" For my own part, as foon as it is Day, I recolled a little what Things I am to read over again [with my Pupils], and then fay to myfelf quickly, What is it to me how fuch a one reads? My chief Point is to get to fleep.
- §. 3. But, indeed, what Likeness is there between the Actions of these [old Fellows at Rome] and ours? If you consider what it is they do, you will see. For about what are they employed the whole Day, but in calculating, contriving, consulting, about Provisions; about an Estate; or other Emoluments like these? Is there any Likeness, then, between reading such a Petition from any one, as—"I intreat you to give me a Permission to export Corn;" and—"I intreat you to learn from Chrysippus, of what Nature in the Administration of the World is; and what Place a rea—"fonable Creature bolds in it. Learn, too, what you yourself are; and wherein your Good and Evil confiss." Are these Things at all alike? Do they require an equal Degree of Application? And is it as shameful to neglect the one as the other (b)?
- §. 4. Well, then, are we Preceptors the only idle Dreamers? No: but you young Men are so first, in a greater Degree. And so even we old Folks, when we see young ones trifling, are tempted to grow fond of trifling with them. Much more, then, if I was to fee you active and diligent, I should be excited to join with you in serious Industry.

⁽b) This Paffage has a ftriking Refemblance to that in Scripture, where the Children of this World are faid to be wifer in their Generation than the Children of Light.

CHAPTER XI.

Of Natural Affection.

§. 1. THEN one of the great Men came to vifit him; V Epictetus, having inquired into the Particulars of his Affairs, asked him, Whether he had a Wife and Children? The other replying, that he had; EpiEtetus likewise inquired, In what Manner do you live with them? Very miferably, fays he----How fo? For Men do not marry, and get Children, to be miferable; but rather to make themfelves happy .---- But, I am fo very miferable about my Children, that the other Day, when my Daughter was fick, and appeared to be in Danger; I could not bear even to be with her: but ran away, till it was told me that she was recovered .---And pray do you think this was acting right? It was acting naturally, faid he .--- Well: do but convince me that it was acting naturally, and I will convince you that every thing natural is right .--- All, or most of us Fathers are affected in the fame Way .--- I do not deny the Fact: but the Question between us is, whether it be right. For, by this Way of Reasoning, it must be said, that Tumours happen for the Good of the Body, because they do happen: and even that Vices are natural, because all or the most Part of us are guilty of them. Do you show me then how such a Behaviour as yours, appears to be natural.

I cannot undertake that. But do you rather show me, how it appears to be neither natural, nor right.

If we were diffuting about Black and White, what Criterion must we call in, to distinguish them?

The Sight.

If about Hot and Cold, and Hard and Soft, what? The Touch.

Well then: when we are debating about Natural and Unnatural, and Right and Wrong; what Criterion are we to take?

I cannot tell.

And yet, to be ignorant of a Criterion of Colours, or of Smells, or Taftes, might perhaps be no very great Lofs. But do you think, that he fuffers only a finall Lofs, who is ignorant of what is Good and Evil, and Natural and Unnatural, to Man?

No. The very greatest.

Well: tell me; Are all Things which are judged good and proper by fome, rightly judged to be so? Is it possible, that the several Opinions of Jews, and Syrians, and Egyptians, and Romans, concerning Food, should all be right?

How can it be possible?

I suppose then, it is absolutely necessary, if the Opinions of the Egyptians be right, the others must be wrong: if those of the Jews be good, all the rest must be bad.

How can it be otherwise?

And where Ignorance is, there likewise is Want of Learning, and Instruction, in necessary Points.

It is granted.

Then, as you are fenfible of this, you will for the future apply to nothing, and think of nothing elfe, but how to G acquaint acquaint yourself with the Criterion of what is agreeable to Nature: and to use that in judging of each particular Case.

§. 2. At prefent the Affiltance I have to give you, towards what you defire, is this. Doth Affection feem to you to be a right and a natural Thing (a)?

How should it be otherwise?

Well: and is Affection natural and right, and Reafon not fo?

By no means.

Is there any Opposition, then, between Reason and Affection?

I think not.

If there was, of two Opposites if one be natural, the other must necessarily be unnatural. Must it not?

It must.

What we find, then, at once affectionate, and reasonable, that we may safely pronounce to be right and good.

Agreed.

Well, then: you will not difpute, but that to run away, and leave a fick Child, is contrary to Reason. It remains for us to consider, whether it be consistent with Affection.

Let us consider it.

Did you, then, from an Affection to your Child, do right in running away, and leaving her? Hath her Mother no Affection for the Child?

⁽a) The Stoics fay, that wife and good Men have the truly natural Affection towards their Children; and bad Perfons have it not. LAERT. L. vii. §. 120.

Yes, furely, she hath.

Would it have been right, then, that her Mother too should leave her; or would it not?

It would not.

And doth not her Nurse love her?

She doth.

Then ought not she likewise to leave her?

By no means.

And doth not her Preceptor love her?

He doth.

Then ought not he also to have run away, and left her: and so the Child to have been left alone, and unaffifted. from the great Affection of her Parents, and her Friends; or to die in the Hands of People, whomeither loved her, nor took care of her?

Heaven forbid!

But is it not unreasonable and unjust, that what you think right in yourself, on the Account of your Affection; should not be allowed to others, who have the very same Affection as you?

It is abfurd.

Pray, if you were fick yourfelf, should you be willing to have your Family, and even your Wife and Children, fo very affectionate, as to leave you helpless and alone?

By no means.

Or would you wish to be so loved by your Friends, as from their exceffive Affection, always to be left alone when you were fick? Or would you not rather wish, if it were possible, to have such a Kind of Affection from your Encmies, as to make them always keep from you? If fo, it G 2 remains remains, that your Behaviour was by no means affectionate. Well then: was it merely nothing that induced you to defert your Child?

How is that possible?

No: but it was some such Motive, as induced a Person at Rome to hide his Face while a Horse was running, to which he earnestly wished Success: and when, beyond his Expectation, it won the Race; he was obliged to have Recourse to Spunges, to recover his Senses.

And what was this Motive?

At prefent perhaps it cannot be accurately explained. It is sufficient to be convinced, (if what Philosophers fay be true) that we are not to feek it from without: but that there is univerfally one and the fame Caufe, which moves us to do or forbear any Action; to fpeak or not to speak; to be elated or depreffed; to avoid or purfue: that very Cause which hath now moved us two; you, to some, and fit and hear me; and me, to speak as I do.

And what is that?

Is it any thing else, than that it seemed right to us to do so?

Nothing else.

And if it had feemed otherwise to us, what should we have done else than what we thought right? This, and not the Death of Patroclus, was the Cause of Lamentation to Achilles, (for every Man is not thus affected by the Death of a Friend) that it seemed right to him. This too was the Cause of your running away from your Child, that it seemed right: and if hereaster you should stay with her, it will be because that seemed right. You are now returning to Rome, because because it seems right to you: but if you should alter your Opinion, you will not return. In a word, neither Death nor Exile, nor Pain, nor any thing of this Kind, is the Cause of our doing, or not doing, any Action: but our Opinions and Principles. Do I convince you of this, or not?

You do.

§ 3. Well then: fuch as the Cause is, fuch will be the Effect. From this Day forward, then, whenever we do any thing wrong, we will impute it only to the Principle from which we act: and we will endeayout to remove that, and cut it up by the Roots, with greater Care than we would Wens and Tumours from the Body. In like manner, we will acribe what we do right, to the same Cause: and we will acribe neither Servant, nor Neighbour, nor Wife, nor Children, as the Causes of any Evils to us; persuaded, that if we had not such Principles, such Consequences would not follow. Of these Principles we ourselves, and not Externals, are the Masters.

Agreed.

From this Day, then, we will neither confider nor enquire of what Sort, or in what Condition, any thing is; our Estate, or Slaves, or Horses, or Dogs, but only our Principles.

I wish to do it.

You fee, then, that it is necessary for you to become a Scholar: that Kind of Animal which every one laughs at; if you really defire to make an Examination of your Principles. But this, as you are sensible, is not the Work of an Hour or a Day.

CHAPTER XII.

Of Contentment.

§.1. CONCERNING the Gods, fome affirm, that there is no Deity: others, that he indeed exifts; but flothful, negligent, and without a Providence: a third Sort admits both his Being and Providence, but only in great and heavenly Objects, and in nothing upon Earth: a fourth, both in Heaven and Earth; but only in general, not Individuals: a fifth, like Useffer and Socrates (a):

POPE's Homer.

It is, before all things, necessary to examine each of these; which is, and which is not, rightly said. Now, if there are no Gods, how is it our End to follow them? If there are, but they take no Care of any thing; how will it be right, in this Case, to follow them? Or, if they both are, and take Care; yet, if there is nothing communicated from them to Men, nor indeed to myself in particular, how can it be right even in this Case? A wise and good Man, after examining these Things, submits his Mind to him who administers the Whole, as good Citizens do to the Laws of the Commonwealth.

⁽a) It was the Opinion of Socrates, That the Gods know all Things that are cither faid or done, or flently thought on: that they are everywhere prefent, and give Significations to Mankind concerning all human Affairs. XLN. MEM. L. 1.

§ 2. He, then, who comes to be inftructed, ought to come with this Intention: "How may I in every thing "follow the Gods? How may I acquiesce in the divine "Administration? And how may I be free?" For He is free, to whom all happens agreeably to his Choice, and whom no one can restrain.

What! then, is Freedom Distraction?

By no means: for Madness and Freedom are incompatible.

But I would have whatever appears to me to be right, happen; however it comes to appear fo.

You are mad: you have loft your Senfes. Do not you know, that Freedom is a very beautiful and valuable Thing? But for me to chuse at random, and for things to happen agreeably to fuch a Choice, may be fo far from a beautiful Thing, as to be, of all others, the most shocking. For how do we proceed in Writing? Do I chuse to write the Name of Dion [for Instance] as I will? No: but I am taught to be willing to write it, as it ought to be writ. And what is the Case in Music? The same. And what in every other Art or Science? Otherwise, it would be to no Purpose to learn any thing; if it was to be adapted to each one's particular Humour. Is it then only in the greatest and principal Point, that of Freedom, permitted me to will at random? By no means: but true Infruction is this: learning to will, that Things should happen as they do. And how do they happen? As the Appointer of them hath appointed. He hath. appointed, that there should be Summer and Winter; Plenty and Dearth; Virtue and Vice; and all fuch Contrarieties, for the Harmony of the Whole (a). To each of us he hath given a Body, and its Parts, and our feveral Properties, and Companions. Mindful of this Appointment, we should enter upon a Course of Education and Instruction, not to change the Constitutions of Things; which is neither put within our Reach, nor for our Good: but that, being as they are, and as their Nature is with regard to us, we may have our Mind accommodated to what exists. Can we, for Instance, fly Mankind? And how is that possible? Can we, by converfing with them, change them? Who hath given us fuch a Power? What then remains, or what Method is there to be found for fuch a Commerce with them, that while they act agreeably to the Appearances in their own Minds, we may nevertheless be affected conformably to Nature? But you are wretched and discontented. If you are alone, you term it a Defart; and if with Men, you call them Cheats and Robbers. You find Fault too with your Parents, and Children, and Brothers, and Neighbours. Whereas you ought, when you live alone, to call that a Repose and Freedom; and to esteem yourself as resembling the Gods: and when you are in Company, not to call it a Crowd and a Tumult, and a Trouble; but an Affembly, and a Festival: and thus to take all things contentedly. What, then, is the Punishment of those who do not? To be just as they are. one discontented with being alone? Let him be in a Defart (b). Discontented with his Parents? Let him be a bad Son; and Difcontented with his Children? Let him let him mourn. be a bad Father. Throw him into Prifon. What Prifon?

⁽a) See Enchiridion, c. xxvii.

⁽b) See Introduction, §. 20. Where

Where he already is: for he is in a Situation against his Will; and where-ever any one is against his Will, that is to him a Prison: just as Socrates was not in Prison; for he was willingly there. " What then must my Leg be lame?"---And is it for one paultry Leg, Wretch, that you accuse the World? Why will you not give it up to the Whole? Why will you not withdraw yourfelf from it? Why will you not gladly yield it to him who gave it? And will you be angry and discontented with the Decrees of Jupiter; which he, with the Fates, who fpun in his Presence the Thread of your Birth, ordained and appointed? Do not you know how very fmall a Part you are of the Whole? That is, as to Body: for, as to Reason, you are neither worse, nor less, than the Gods. For Reason is not measured by Length or Height; but by Principles. Will you not therefore place your Good there, where you are equal to the Gods (d)? "How " wretched am I in fuch a Father and Mother!"----What, then, was it granted you to come before-hand, and make your own Terms, and fay; "Let fuch and fuch Perfons, at this " Hour, be the Authors of my Birth?" It was not granted: for it was necessary that your Parents should exist before you, and fo you be born afterwards .--- Of whom ?---- Of just fuch as they were. What, then, fince they are fuch, is there no Remedy afforded you? Now, furely, if you were ignorant to what Purpose you possess the Faculty of Sight, you would be wretched and miferable, in flutting your Eyes at the Approach of Colours: and are not you more wretched and miferable, in being ignorant, that you have a Greatness of Soul, and a manly Spirit, answerable to each of the abovementioned Accidents? Occurrences proportioned to your Faculty [of Difcernment] are brought before you: but you turn it away, at the very Time when you ought to have it the most open, and quick-fighted. Why do not you rather thank the Gods, that they have made you fuperior to whatever they have not placed in your own Power; and have rendered you accountable for that only, which is in your own Power? Of your Parents they acquit you; as not accountable: of your Brothers they acquit you: of Body, Poffeffions, Death, Life, they acquit you. For what, then, have they made you accountable? For that which is alone in your own Power; a right Use of the Appearances of Objects. Why, then, should you draw those Things upon yourself, for which you are not accountable? This is giving one's felf Trouble, without need.

⁽d) One of the Stoic Extravagances; ariting from the Notion, that human Souls were literally Parts of the Deity.

CHAPTER XIII.

How every Thing may be performed acceptably to the Gods.

HEN a Person inquired, How any one might eat acceptably to the Gods: if he eats with Justice, says EpiEletus, and Gratitude; and fairly, and temperately, and decently; must be not also eat acceptably to the Gods? And when you call for hot Water, and your Servant doth not hear you; or, if he doth, brings it only warm; or perhaps is not to be sound at home; then, not to be angry, or burst with Passion: is not this acceptable to the Gods?

But how, then, can one bear fuch things?

Wretch, will you not bear with your own Brother, who hath God for his Father, as being a Son from the fame Stock, and of the fame high Descent [with yourself]? But, if you chance to be placed in some superior Station, will you prefently set yourself up for a Tyrant? Will you not remember what you are, and over whom you bear Rule? That they are by Nature your Relations, your Brothers; that they are the Offspring of God? (a)

But I have them by Right of Purchafe, and not they me. Do you fee what it is you regard? That it is Earth and Mire, and thefe wretched Laws of dead (b) Men; and that you do not regard those of the Gods.

CHAPTER XIV.

That all Things are under the divine Inspection.

§. I. WHEN a Person asked him, How any one might be convinced, that each of his Actions are under the Inspection of God? Do not you think, says Epictetus, that all Things are mutually bound together and united?

⁽a) If I did definite the Caufe of my Man Servant, or my Maid Servant, when they contended with me: what then fhall I do when God rifeth np? And when he vifiteth, what fall I answer him? Did not I fe volo made me in the Womb, make him? And did not One fifthion us in the Womb? Hob XXII. 13, 14, 15.

⁽b) i. e. Deceafed Legislators, who had in View low and worldly Confiderations.

I do.

Well: and do not you think, that Things on Earth feel the Influence of the heavenly Bodies?

Yes.

Else how could the Trees so regularly, as if by God's express Command, bud, (a) blossom, bring forth Fruit, and ripen it: then let it drop, and shed their Leaves, and lie contracted within themselves in Quiet and Repose; all when He speaks the Word? Whence, again, are there seen, on the Increase and Decrease of the Moon, and the Approach and Departure of the Sun, fo great Viciflitudes and Changes, to the direct contrary, in earthly Things? Have then the very Leaves, and our own Bodies, this Connection and Sympathy with the Whole; and have not our Souls much more? But our Souls are thus connected and intimately joined to God, as being indeed Members, and diffinct Portions, of his Effence: and must not He be sensible of every Movement of them, as belonging, and connatural to himself? Can even you think of the divine Administration, and every other divine Subject. and together with these of human Affairs also: can you at once receive Impressions on your Senses and your Understanding from a thousand Objects; at once assent to some things, deny or fuspend your Judgment concerning others, and preferve in your Mind Impressions from so many and various Objects, and whenever you are moved by [the Traces of] them, hit on Ideas fimilar to those which first impressed you: can you retain a Variety of Arts, and the Memorials of ten thou-

⁽a) There is a Beauty in the Original, arifing from the different Terminations in the Verbs, which cannot be preferved in our Language.

thousand Things: and is not God capable of surveying all Things, and being present with all, and receiving a certain Communication from all? Is the Sun capable of illuminating so great a Portion of the Universe, and of leaving only that small Part of it unilluminated, which is covered by the Shadow of the Earth: and cannot He who made and revolves the Sun, a small Part of himself, if compared with the Whole; cannot He perceive all Things?

§. 2. " But I cannot (fay you) attend to all Things at "once." Why, doth any one tell you, that you have equal Power with Jupiter? No: but nevertheless He has assigned to each Man a Director, his own good Genius, and committed him to his Guardianship: a Director, whose Vigilance no Slumbers interrupt, and whom no false Reasonings can deceive. For, to what better and more careful Guardian could he have committed us? So that when you have shut your Doors, and darkened your Room, remember, never to fay that you are alone; for you are not: but God is within, and your Genius is within: and what need have they of Light, to fee what you are doing? To (b) this God. you likewife ought to fwear fuch an Oath as the Soldiers do to Cæfar. For do they, in order to receive their Pay, swear to prefer before all things, the Safety of Cafar: and will not you fivear, who have received fo many and fo great Favours: or, if you have fworn, will you not fland to it? And what must you swear? Never to disobey, nor accuse, nor murmur at any of the Things appointed by him: nor unwillingly to do or suffer any thing necessary. Is this Oath like the former? In the first, Persons swear not to honour any other beyond Cwsar; in the last, beyond all, to honour themselves.

⁽b) Perhaps the K_{ett} in this Line may have been mifplaced; and it fhould be read τυτω Κει τω Θεω εδει υμως; and then the Tranflation will be——To this [Genius] and to God you ought to fwear, Θε.

CHAPTER XV.

What it is that Philosophy promises.

§. I. WHEN one confulted him, How he might perfude his Brother to forbear treating him ill: Philosophy, answered Epitletus, doth not promise to procure any thing external to Man; otherwise it would admit something beyond its proper Subject-matter. For the Subject-matter of a Carpenter is Wood; of a Statuary, Brass: and so, of the Art of Living, the Subject-matter is each Person's own Life.

What, then, is my Brother's?

That, again, belongs to his own Art [of Living]; but to your's is external: like an Estate, like Health, like Reputation. Now, Philosophy promises none of these. In every Circumstance I will preserve the governing Part conformable to Nature. Whose governing Part? His in whom I exist.

But how, then, is my Brother to lay afide his Anger against me ?

Bring him to me, and I will tell him; but I have nothing to fay to you about his Anger.

§. 2. Well: but I still farther ask, How am I to keep myself in a State of Mind conformable to Nature, though he should not be reconciled to me?

No great Thing is brought to Perfection fuddenly; when not fo much as a Bunch of Grapes or a Fig is. If you tell me, that you would at this Minute have a Fig, I will answer you, that there must be Time. Let it first (a) blossom, then bear Fruit, then ripen. Is then the Fruit of a Fig-tree not brought to Perfection suddenly, and in one Hour; and would you posses the Fruit of the human Mind in so short a Time, and without Trouble? I tell you, expect no such thing.

CHAPTER XVI.

Of Providence.

§.1. BE not furprifed, if other Animals have all Things necessary to the Body ready provided for them, not only Meat and Drink but Lodging: that they want neither Shoes, nor Bedding, nor Clothes; while we stand in need of all these. For they not being made for themselves, but for Service, it was not fit that they should be formed so as to need the Help of others. For, consider what it would be for us to take care, not only for ourselves, but for Sheep and Asses

⁽a) The Philosopher had forgot that Fig-trees do not blofton: and is lefs excusable than the Englife Translators of the Bible, Etah. ii. 17 to whom Fig-trees were not so familiar. But the Hebrew Word used there fignifies rather in general to shoot out, thrive, than in particular to flower. The LXX have Καρπορομού; reading, perhaps.
This Note was given to the Translator by a Friend.

too: how they should be clothed, how shod, and how they should eat and drink. But as Soldiers are ready for their Commander, shod, clothed, and armed (for it would be a grievous thing for a Colonel to be obliged to go through his Regiment to put on their Shoes and Clothes): so Nature likewise has formed the Animals made for Service, ready provided, and standing in need of no further Care. Thus one little Boy, with only a Crook, drives a Flock.

8. 2. But now we, instead of being thankful for this, complain of God, that there is not the same kind of Care taken of us likewife. And yet, good Heaven! any one Thing in the Creation is fufficient to demonstrate a Providence, to a modest and grateful Mind. Not to instance at present in great Things: but only in the very Production of Milk from Grass, Cheese from Milk, and Wool from Skins: who formed and contrived these Things? No one, say you. O furprifing Stupidity, and Want of Shame! But come; let us omit the Works of Nature. Let us contemplate what she hath done, as it were, by-the-bye. What is more useless than the Hairs which grow on the Chin? And yet hath she not made use even of these, in the most becoming manner posfibly? Hath she not by these distinguished the Sexes? Doth not Nature in each of us call out, even at a Distance, I am a Man; approach and address me as such; enquire no farther; fee the Characteristic. On the other hand, with regard to Women, as the hath mixed fomething fofter in their Voice, so she hath deprived them of a Beard. But no: to be sure, the Animal should have been left undistinguished, and each of us obliged to proclaim, I am a Man! But why is not this this Characteriftic beautiful, and becoming, and venerable? How much more beautiful than the Comb of Cocks; how much more noble than the Mane of Lions! Therefore, we ought to have preferved the divine Characteriftics: we ought not to have rejected them; nor confounded, as much as in us lay, the diftinct Sexes.

§. 3. Are these the only Works of Providence, with regard to us (a) And what Words can proportionably express our Applauses and Praise? For, if we had any Understanding, ought we not both, in public and in private, incessantly to sing Hymns, and speak well of the Deity, and rehearse his Benefits? Ought we not, whether we are diging, or ploughing, or eating, to fing the Hymn [due] to God? Great is God, who has supplied us with these Instruments to till the Ground: Great is God, who has given us Hands, a Power of Swallowing, a Stomach: who has given us to grow infenfibly, to breathe in Sleep. [Even] these Things we ought upon every Occasion to celebrate; but to make it the Subject of the greatest and most divine Hymn, that he has given us the Faculty of apprehending them, and using them in a proper Way. Well then: because the most of you are blind and infenfible, was it not necessary, that there should be some one to fill this Station, and give out, for all Men, the Hymn to God? For what elfe can I, a lame old Man, do, but fing Hymns to God? If I was a Nightingale, I would act the Part of a Nightingale: if a Swan (b), the

⁽a) Something here feems to be loft.

⁽b) The Ancients imagined Swans could fing very melodiously.

Part of a Swan. But, fince I am a reasonable Creature, it is my Duty to praise God. This is my Business. I do it. Nor will I ever desert this Post, as long as it is vouchsafed me: and I exhort you to join in the same Song (c).

CHAPTER XVII.

That the Art of Reasoning is necessary.

§. 1. SINCE it is Reason which sets in order and finishes all other Things, it ought not itself to be left in Disorder. But by what shall it be set in Order?

Evidently, either by itself, or by something else.

Well: either that too is Reason, or there is something else superior to Reason (which is impossible): and, if it be Reason, what, again, shall set that in Order? For, if Reason can set itself in Order in one Case, it can in another: and, if we will still require any thing further, it will be infinite, and without End.

But, the more urgent Necessity is to cure [our Opinions, Passions], and the like (a).

Would you hear about these, therefore? Well: hear. But then, if you should say to me, "I cannot tell whether your "Arguments are true or salse;" and if I should happen to express myself doubtfully, and you should say, "diftinguish "[which Sense you mean]," I will bear with you no longer;

⁽c) Beautiful and affecting Examples of fuch Praife and Exhortation, fee in Pf. xxxiv. civ. cxlv. and other Parts of the facred Writings.

⁽a) The Sense here is supplied from a Conjecture of Wolfius.

but will retort your own Words upon you; the more urgent Necessity is, &c. Therefore, I suppose, the Art of Reasoning is first settled: just as, before the Measuring of Corn, we settle the Measure. For, unless we first determine what a Bushel, and what a Balance, is, how shall we be able to measure or weigh? Thus, in the prefent Case: unless we have first learnt, and accurately examined, that which is the Criterion of other Things, and by which other Things are learnt, how shall we be able accurately to learn any thing else? And how is it possible? Well: a Bushel, however, is only Wood, a Thing of no Value [in itself]: but it measures Corn. And Logic [you fay] is of no Value in itself. we will confider hereafter. Let us, for the present, then, make the Concession. It is enough that it distinguishes and examines, and, as one may fay, measures and weighs all other Things. Who fays this? Is it only Chrysppus, and Zeno, and Cleanthes? And doth not Antifthenes fay it? And who is it, then, who has written, That the Beginning of a right Education is the Examination of Words? Doth not Socrates fay it? Of whom, then, doth Xenophon write, That he began by the Examination of Words; what each fignified (b).

§. 2. Is this, then, the great and admirable Thing, to understand or interpret Chrysppus?

⁽b) The Stoics were remarkably exact in tracing the Etymology of Words: a Study, certainly, of very great Ufe: but, by too great Subtlety and Refinement, they were often led by it into much Trifling and Abfurdity.

Who fays that it is? But what, then, is the admirable Thing?

To understand the Will of Nature.

Well then: do you apprehend it of yourfelf? In that Cafe, what Need have you for any one elfe? For, if it be true, that Men never err but involuntarily; and you have learnt the Truth, you must necessarily act right.

But, indeed, I do not apprehend the Will of Nature. Who, then, shall interpret that?

They fay, Chryspipus (c). I go and inquire what this Interpreter of Nature says. I begin not to understand his Meaning. I feek one to interpret that. Here explain how this is expressed, and as if it were put into Latin. How, then, doth a supercilious Self-opinion belong to the Interpreter!

Indeed, it doth not juftly belong to Chrysppu himself, if he only interprets the Will of Nature, and doth not follow it: and much less to his Interpreter. For we have no need of Chrysppus, on his own Account; but that, by his Means, we may apprehend the Will of Nature: nor do we need a Diviner on his own Account; but that, by his Assistance, we hope to understand future Events, and what is signified by the Gods: nor the Entrails of the Victims, on their own Account; but, on the Account of what is signified by them: neither is it the Raven, or the Crow, that we admire; but the God, who delivers his Significations by their Means. I come, therefore, to the Diviner and Interpreter of these Things; and say, "Inspect the Entrails for me: what is significations when the God, who delivers his Significations by their Means.

⁽c) See the Enchiridion, ch. xlix.

- " nified to me?" Having taken, and laid them open, he thus interprets them. You have a Choice, Man, incapable of being restrained or compelled. This is written here in the Entrails. I will show you this first, in the Faculty of Assent. Can any one reftrain you from affenting to Truth?----" No one."----Can any one compel you to admit a Falfehood?--" No one."---You fee, then, that you have in this Topic a Choice incapable of being reftrained, or compelled, or hindered. Well: is it any otherwise with regard to Pursuit and Defire? What can conquer one Pursuit?---" Another " Purfuit." --- What, Defire and Aversion? " Another Defire " and another Aversion." If you set Death before me (say you) you compel me. No: not what is fet before you doth it: but your Principle, that it is better to do fuch or fuch a thing, than to die. Here, again, you fee it is your own Principle which compels you; that is, Choice compels Choice. For, if God had conftituted that Portion which he hath feparated from his own Effence, and given to us, capable of being restrained or compelled, either by himself, or by any other, he would not have been God; nor have taken care of us, in a due manner.
- §. 3. These Things, says the Diviner, I find in the Victims. These Things are fignified to you. If you please, you are free. If you please, you will have no one to complain of; no one to accuse. All will be equally according to your own Mind, and to the Mind of God.
- §. 4. For the Sake of this Oracle, I go to the Diviner and the Philosopher: admiring not him merely on the Account Account of his Interpretation, but the Things which he interprets.

CHAPTER XVIII.

That we are not to be angry with the Errors of others.

§. 1. (a) If what the Philosophers say be true, That all Mens Actions proceed from one Source: that, as they affent, from a Persuasion that a Thing is so, and dissent, from a Persuasion that it is not; and suspend their Judgment, from a Persuasion that it is uncertain; so, likewise, they exert their Pursuits, from a Persuasion that such a Thing is for their Advantage: and it is impossible to efteem one Thing advantageous, and desire another; to efteem one Thing a Duty, and pursue another: why, after all, should we be angry at the Multitude?

They are Thieves and Pilferers. What do you mean by Thieves and Pilferers? They are in an Error concerning Good and Evil. Ought you, then, to be angry, or to pity them? Do but show them their Error, and you will fee, that they will amend their Faults: but, if they do not fee it, the Principles they form, are to them their fupreme Rule.

⁽a) The moft ignorant Perfons often practife what they know to be evol: and they, who voluntarily fuffer, as many do, their Inclinations to blind their Judgment, are not jufflifted by following it. The Doctrine of Epidetus, therefore, here, and elsewhere, on this Head, contradicts the Voice of Reasion and Confcience: nor is it less pernicious, than ill grounded. It deftroys all Guilt and Merit, all Punishment and Reward, all Blame of ourfelves or others, all Sense of Misbehaviour towards our Fellow-creatures, or our Creator. No wonder that such Philosophers did not teach Repentance towards God.

What, then, ought not this Thief and this Adulterer to be deftroyed?

By no means [ask that]: but say rather (b), "Ought not he " to be deftroyed, who errs and is deceived in Things of the "greatest Importance; blinded, not in the Sight that dif-"tinguishes White from Black, but in the Judgment, that " diftinguishes Good from Evil?" By stating your Question thus, you see how inhuman it is; and just as if you would say, "Ought not this blind, or that deaf Man, to be destroyed?" For, if the greatest Hurt be a Deprivation of the most valuable Things, and the most valuable Thing to every one is a right Judgment in chusing; when any one is deprived of this, why, after all, are you angry? You ought not to be affected, Man, contrary to Nature, by the Ills of another. Pity (c) him rather. Do not be angry; nor fay, as many do; What! shall these execrable and odious Wretches dare to act thus! Whence have you fo fuddenly learnt Wifdom? Because we admire those Things which such People take from Do not admire your Clothes, and you will not be angry with the Thief. Do not admire the Beauty of your Wife, ⁽b) Several Words are wanting in different Places of fome of the following Lines of the Greek; which are conjecturally supplied in the Translation from Mr. Uprov's Version.

⁽e) See Gal. vi. 1. and many other Parts of the New Teflament, in which all the Humanity and Tenderness prescribed by the Stoics are enjoined; and the dangerous Notions, on which they found them, are avoided.

The Discourses of Book I.

and you will not be angry with an Adulterer. Know, that a Thief and an Adulterer have no place, in the Things that are properly your own: but in those that belong to others; and which are not in your Power. If you give up these Things, and look upon them as nothing, with whom will you any longer be angry? But, while you admire them, be anory with yourself, rather than with others. Consider only: You have a fine Suit of Clothes; your Neighbour has not. You have a Window; you want to air them. He knows not in what the Good of Man confifts; but imagines it is in a fine Suit of Clothes: the very Thing which you imagine too. Must not he, then, of course, come and take them away? When you show a Cake to greedy People, and are devouring it all yourself; would not you have them fnatch it from you? Do not provoke them. Do not have a Window. Do not air your Clothes. I, too, the other Day, had an Iron Lamp burning before my Houshold Deities. Hearing a Noise at the Window, I ran. I found my Lamp was stolen. I considered, that he who took it away, did nothing unaccountable. What then? To-morrow, favs I. you shall find an Earthen one: for a Man loses only what he hath. I have loft my Coat. Ay: because you had a Coat. I have a Pain in my Head. Why, can you have a Pain in your Horns (d)? Why, then, are you out of Humour? For Loss and Pain can be only of fuch Things as are possessed.

64

⁽d) This alludes to a famous Quibble among the Stoics. What you bave not loft, you have: but you have not loft a Pair of Horns; therefore you have a Pair of Horns. Urron.

§. 2. But the Tyrant will chain—What?—A Leg.—He will take away—What?—A Head.—What is there, then, that he can neither chain, nor take away?—The Will, and Choice. Hence the Advice of the Ancients—Know thyfelf.

What ought to be done, then?

Exercife yourfelf, for Heaven's fake, in little Things; and thence proceed to greater. "I have a Pain in my Head."——Do not cry, alas!——"I have a Pain in my Ear"——Do not cry, alas! I do not fay, you may not groan; but do not groan inwardly: or, if your Servant is a long while in bringing you fomething to bind your Head, do not bawl, and diltort yourfelf; and fay; "Every body hates me." For, who would not hate fuch a one?

§. 3. Relying for the future on these Principles, walk upright, and free; not trusting to Bulk of Body, like a Wreftler: for one should not be unconquerable in the Sense that an As is.

Who then is unconquerable? He whom nothing, independent on Choice, difconcerts.

Then I run over every Circumstance, and confider [fuch a one in each. As they fay] of an athletic Champion. He has been victorious in the first Encounter: What will he do in the Second? What, if the Heat should be excessive? What, if he were to appear at the Heat should be excessive? What, if he were to appear at in his Way? He will despite it. What, if a Girl? What, if in the dark? What, if he be tried by popular Fame, Calumny, Praise, Death? He is able to overcome them all. What, then, if he be placed in the Heat, or in the K.

Rain (e)? What, if he be hypochondriac, or afleep? [Just the fame.] This is my unconquerable athletic Champion.

CHAPTER XIX.

Of the Behaviour to be observed towards Tyrants.

§. I. When a Person is possessed of some either real or imaginary Superiority, unless he hath been well instructed, he will necessarily be puffed up with it. A Tyrant, for Instance, says; "I am supreme over All."——And what can you do for Me? Can you exempt my Desires from Disappointment? How should you? For do you never incur your own Aversions? Are your own Pursuits installible? Whence should You come by that Privilege? Pray, on Shipboard, do you trust to yourself, or to the Pilot? In a Chariot, to whom but to the Driver? And to whom in all other Arts? Just the same. In what, then, doth your Power consist?——"All Men pay Regard to me."

⁽e) Mr. Upton observes, That Epithtus here applies to the wise Man, what he had just been singing of the athletic Champion: and he proposes a Change in one Word; by which, instead of the Heat, or the Rain, the Translation will be, in a Fever, or in Drink. For the Stoics held their wise Man to be a perfect Master of himself in all these Circumstances. The Passages which Mr. Upton produces from L. ii. c. 17. towards the Engianing, makes the Conjecture of unwpers for 'νομετος as probable as it is ingenious. But yet the στουν αν καυρα, ν οπο would imagine to have crept in by a Repetition of the Transscriber, from the Description, a few Lines before; as it is stearcely probable, that the same Word should be used by Epithtus in two different Senses, at 6 small a Distance, in the same Discourse.

So do I to my Desk. I wash it, and wipe it; and drive a Nail, for the Service of my Oil Flask.—" What, then, are these "Things to be valued beyond Me?"—No: but they are of fome Use to me, and therefore I pay Regard to them. Why, Do not I pay Regard to an Ass? Do I not wash his Feet? Do not I clean him? Do not you know, that every one pays Regard to himself; and to you, just as he doth to an Ass? For who pays Regard to you as a Man? Show that. Who would wish to be like You? Who would desire to imitate You, as he would Socrates?——" But I can take off your "Head?"——You say right. I had forgot, that one is to pay Regard to you as to a Fever, or the Cholic; and that there should be an Altar erected to you, as there is to the Goddess Fever at Rome.

§. 2. What is it, then, that diffurbs and strikes Terror into the Multitude? The Tyrant, and his Guards? By no means. What is by Nature free, cannot be diffurbed, or reftrained, by any thing but itself. But its own Principles disturb it. Thus, when the Tyrant fays to any one; " I will chain " your Leg:" he who values his Leg, cries out for Pity: while he, who fets the Value on his own Will and Choice, fays; " If you imagine it for your Interest, chain it."----"What! do not you care?"---No: I do not care.---"I " will show you that I am Master." ---- You? How should You? Jupiter has fet me free. What ! do you think he would fuffer his own Son to be enflaved? You are Mafter of my Carcafe. Take it .--- "So that, when you come into my " Presence, you pay no Regard to me?" ---- No: but to myfelf: or, if you will have me fay, to you alfo: I tell you; K 2 the the fame to you as to a Pipkin. This is not felfish Vanity: for every Animal is fo constituted, as to do every thing for its own Sake. Even the Sun doth all for his own Sake: nay; and to name no more, even Jupiter himself. But, when he would be fliled the Difpenfer of Rain and Plenty, and the Father of Gods and Men, you fee that he cannot attain these Offices and Titles, unless he contributes to the common Utility. And he hath univerfally to conftituted the Nature of every reafonable Creature, that no one can attain any of its own proper Advantages, without contributing fomething to the Use of Society. And thus it becomes not unfociable to do every thing for one's own Sake. For, do you expect, that a Man should defert himself, and his own Interest? How, then, can all Beings have one and the same original Instinct, Attachment to themselves? What follows, then? That where those abfurd Principles, concerning Things independent on Choice, as if they were either good or evil, are at the Bottom, there must necessarily be a Regard paid to Tyrants: and I wish it were to Tyrants only. and not to the very Officers of their Bed-chamber too. And how wife doth a Man grow on a fudden, when Cæfar has made him Clerk of the Clofe-stool? How immediately we fay, "Felicio talked very fenfibly to me!" I wish he were turned out of the Bed-chamber, that he might once more appear to you the Fool he is.

§ 3. Epaphroditus had [a Slave, that was] a Shoemaker; whom, because he was good for nothing, he fold. This very Fellow being, by some strange Luck; bought by a Courtier, became Shoemaker to Caefar. Then you might have have feen how Epaphroditus honoured him. "How doth good Felicio do, pray?" And, if any of us afked, what the great Man himfelf was about, it was answered; "He is "confulting about Affairs with Felicio." Did not he sell him, as good for nothing? Who, then, hath, all on a sudden, made a wise Man of him? This it is to honour any thing, besides what depends on Choice.

§. 4. Is any one exalted to the Office of Tribune? All that meet him congratulate him. One kiffes his Eyes, another his Neck, and the Slaves his Hands. He goes to his Houfe; finds it illuminated. He accends the Capitol. Offers a Sacrifice. Now, who ever offered a Sacrifice for having good Defires? For exerting Purfuits conformable to Nature? For we thank the Gods for that wherein we place our Good.

§. 5. A Person was talking with me To-day about the Priefthood (a) of Augustus. I say to him, Let the thing alone, Friend: you will be at great Expence for nothing. "But my Name, sayshe, will be written in the Annals." Will you stand by, then, and tell those who read them; "I am "the Person whose Name is written there?" But, if you could tell every one so now, what will you do when you are dead?—"My Name will remain."—Write it upon a Stone, and it will remain just as well. But, pray what Remembrance will there be of you out of Nicopolis?—" But I

⁽a) When Temples began to be credted to the Emperors, as to Gods, the Office of Priett was purchaind by vile Flatterers, at a very great Expense. UPTON from CASAUBON.

" fhall wear a Crown (b) of Gold."——If your Heart is quite fet upon a Crown, take and put on one of Roses; for it will make the prettier Appearance.

CHAPTER XX.

In what manner Reason contemplates itself.

Things as its principal Objects. Whenever, therefore, to it is of the same Nature with the Objects of its Contemplations, it necessarily contemplates itself too. But, where it is of a different Nature, it cannot contemplate itself. The Art of Shoemaking, for Instance, is exercised upon Leather; but is itself intirely distinct from the Materials it works upon: therefore it doth not contemplate itself. Again: Grammar is exercised on articulate Speech. Is the Art of Grammar itself, then, articulate Speech?

By no means.

Therefore it cannot contemplate itself. To what Purpose, then, is Reason appointed by Nature?

To a proper Use of the Appearances of Things.

And what is Reason?

A Composition of certain Appearances to the Mind: and, thus, by its Nature, it becomes contemplative of itself too. Again: what Subjects of Contemplation belong to Prudence?

⁽b) Which was the Ornament of the Priefts, while they were offering Sacrifice.

Nicopolis was built by Augustus, in memory of the Victory at Actium.

Good, and Evil, and Indifferent. What, then, is Prudence itself? Good. What, Imprudence?

Evil.

You fee, then, that it necessarily contemplates both itself and its contrary. Therefore, the first and greatest Work of a Philosopher is, to try and distinguish the Appearances; and to admit none untried. Even in Money, where our Interest seems to be concerned, you see what an Art we have invented; and how many Ways an Assayer uses to try its Value. By the Sight; the Touch; the Smell; and, laftly, the Hearing. He throws the Piece down, and attends to the Tingle; and is not contented with its Tingling only once; but, by frequent Attention to it, becomes quite mufical. In the fame manner, whenever we think it of Confequence, whether we are deceived or not, we use the utmost Attention to diffinguish those Things which may possibly deceive us. But, yawning and flumbering over the poor miferable ruling Faculty, we admit every Appearance that offers. For here the Mischief doth not strike us. When you would know. then, how very languidly you are affected by Good and Evil, and how vehemently by Things indifferent; confider how you are affected with regard to being blinded, and how with regard to being deceived: and you will find, that you are far from being moved, as you ought, in relation to Good and Evil.

But much previous Qualification, and much Labour, and Learning, are wanted.

What,

What, then? Do you expect the greatest of Arts is to be acquired by slight Endeavours? And yet the principal Doctrine of the Philosophers, of itself, is short. If you have a mind to know it, read Zeno, and you will see (a). For what Prolixity is there in faying, Our End is to follow the Gods? And, The Essence of Good consist in the proper Use of the Appsarances of Things. Indeed, if you say, What, then, is God? What is an Appearance? What is particular, what universal Nature? Here the Assair becomes prolix. And so, if Epicurus should come and say, that Good must be placed in Body; here, too, it will be prolix: and it will be necessary to hear, what is the principal, the substantial and effen-

⁽a) Zeno, the Founder of the Stoic Sect, was born at Cittium, a Seaport Town, in the Island of Cyprus. He was originally a Merchant: and very rich. On a Voyage from Tyre, where he had been trading in Purple, he was shipwrecked, near the Piraum. During his Stay at Athens, he happened to meet, in a Bookfeller's Shop, with the Second Book of Xenophon's Memoirs; with which he was extremely delighted: and asked the Bookseller, where such kind of Persons, as the Author mentioned, were to be found. The Bookfeller answered, pointing to Crates, the Cynic, who was luckily paffing by; Follow him: which Zeno did, and became his Disciple. But his Disposition was too modest to approve of the Cynic Indecency: and, forfaking Crates, he applied himfelf to the Academics, whom he attended for ten Years, and then formed a School of his own. There was a conftant Severity, or, perhaps, Aufterity, in his Manners, his Drefs, and his Difcourfe; except at an Entertalisment, when he used to appear with Chearfulness and Ease. His Morals were irreproachable: and he was prefented by the Athenians with a golden Crown; because his Life was a public Example of Virtue. by its Conformity with his Words and Doctrines. He lived Ninety-eight Years; and then strangled himself; because, in going out of his School, he happened to fall down, and break his Finger. DIOG, LAERT, in Zeno.

tial Part in us. It is unlikely, that the Good of a Snail should be placed in the Shell: and, is it likely, that the Good of a Man should? You yourself, Epicurus, have something superior to this. What is That in you, which deliberates, which examines, which forms the Judgment, concerning Body itself, that it is the principal Part? And why do you light your Lamp, and labour for us, and write so many Books? That we may not be ignorant of the Truth? What are We? What are we to You? Thus the Doctrine becomes prolived.

CHAPTER XXI.

Of the Desire of Admiration.

WHEN a Person maintains his proper Station in Life, he doth not gape after Externals. What would you have. Man?

"I am contented, if my Defires and Aversions are con-"formable to Nature: if I manage my Powers of Pursuit

" and Avoidance, my Purposes, and Intentions and Affent,

" in the manner I was formed to do."

Add to the start

Why, then, do you walk as if you had fwallowed a Spit?

"I could wish moreover to have all who meet me, admire me, and all who follow me, cry out, What a great Philosopher!"

Who are those, by whom you would be admired? Are they not the very People, who, you used to say, were mad? What, then, would you be admired by Madmen?

CHAPTER XXII.

Of Pre-conceptions.

§. 1. Re-conceptions (a) are common to all Men: and one Pre-conception doth not contradict another. For, who of us doth not lay it down as a Maxim, That Good is advantageous and eligible, and at all Events, to be purfued and followed: that Justice is fair and becoming? Whence, then, arises the Dispute?---In adapting these Preconceptions to particular Cases. As, when one cries; "Such " a Person hath acted well: he is a gallant Man:" and another; "No; he hath acted like a Fool." Hence arifes the Dispute among Men. This is the Dispute between Yews, and Syrians, and Egyptians, and Romans: not whether Sanctity be preferable to all Things, and in every Instance to be purfued; but whether the eating Swine's Flesh be confiftent with Sanctity, or not. This, too, you will find to have been the Dispute between Achilles and Agamemnon. For, call them forth. What fay you, Agamemnon? Ought not that to be done, which is fit and right?---Yes, furely.---Achilles, what fay you? Is it not agreeable to you, that what is right should be done?----Yes: beyond every other thing. Adapt your Pre-conceptions, then. Here begins the Dispute. One fays; " It is not fit, that I should restore Chryseis to " her Father." The other fays; "Yes; but it is." One, or the other of them, certainly makes a wrong Adaptation of the Pre-conception of Fitness. Again: one says; "If it "be fit, that I should give up Chryseis; it is fit, too, that I should take some one of your Prizes." The other: "What, "that you should take my Mistress?" "Ay; yours." "What, mine only? Must I only, then, lose my Prize?"

⁽a) See Introduction, §. 10.

- §. 2. What, then, is it to be properly educated? To learn how to adapt natural Pre-conceptions to particular Cases, conformably to Nature: and, for the future, to distinguish, that some Things are in our own Power; others not. In our own Power, are Choice, and all Actions dependent on Choice: not in our Power, the Body, the Parts of the Body, Property, Parents, Brothers, Children, Country; and, in short, all with whom we are engaged in Society. Where, then, shall we place Good? To what kind of Things shall we adapt the Pre-conception of it? To that in our own Power.
- §. 3. What, then, is not Health, and Strength, and Life, good? And are not Children, nor Parents, nor Country? Who will have Patience with you?

Let us transfer it, then, to the other Sort of Things. Can he who fuffers Harm, and is disappointed of good Things, be happy?

He cannot.

And can he preferve a right Behaviour with regard to Society? How it is possible he should? For I am naturally led to my own Interest. If, therefore, it is for my Interest, to have an Estate, it is for my Interest likewise to take it away from my Neighbour. If it is for my Interest to have a Suit of Clothes; it is for my Interest likewise to steal it where-ever I find it (b). Hence Wars, Seditions, Tyranny, unjust Invasions. How shall I, if this be the Case, be able, any longer, to preserve my Duty towards Jupiter? If I fuffer Harm, and am disappointed, he takes no care of me. And, what is Jupiter to me, if he cannot help me: or, again: what is he to me, if he chuses I should be in the Condition I am? Henceforward I begin to hate him. What, then, do we build Temples, do we raise Statues, to Jupiter, as to evil Demons, as to the Goddess Fever? How, at this rate, is he the Preserver; and how the Dispenser of Rain and Plenty? If we place the Effence of Good any-where here, all this will follow .--- What, then, shall we do?

§. 4. This is the Enquiry of him who philosophizes in reality, and labours to bring forth [Truth]. "Do (c) not "I now fee what is good, and what is evil?" Surely I am. in my Senses. Ay: but shall, I place Good any-where on this other Side; in Things dependent [only] on my own Choice? Why, every one will laugh at me. Some greyheaded old Fellow will come, with his Fingers covered with Gold Rings, and shake his Head, and fay; "Hark ye, " Child, it is fit you should learn Philosophy; but it is " fit, too, you should have Brains. This is Nonfense. You

⁽b) Wars and Fightings are ascribed to the same Causes, by St. James,

⁽c) This feems intended to express the Perplexity of a Person convinced, that Good is not to be found in Externals; and afraid of popular Raillery, if he places it in fuch Things only, as depend on our own Choice.

[&]quot; learn

" learn Syllogisms from Philosophers: but how you are to act, you know better than they." "Then, why do you chide me, Sir, if I do know." What can I say to this Wretch? If I make no Answer, he will burst. I must e'en answer thus: "Forgive me, as they do People in Love. I am an mot myself. I have lost my Senses."

CHAPTER XXIII.

Against EPICURUS.

§.1. EVEN Epicurus is fenfible, that we are by Nature fociable: but having once placed our Good in the mere Shell, he can fay nothing afterwards different from that. For, again, he ftrenuoully maintains, that we ought not to admire, or receive, any thing feparated from the Nature of Good. And he is in the right to maintain it. But how, then, came (a) any fuch Sufpicions [as your Doctrines imply, to arife], if we have no natural Affection towards an Offfpring? Why do you, Epicurus, diffuade a wife Man from bringing up Children? Why are you afraid, that, upon their Account, he may fall into Uneafineffes? Doth he fall into any for a Moufe, that feeds within his Houfe? What is it to him, if a little Moufe bewails itfelf there? But Epicurus knew, that, if once a Child is born, it is no longer in our Power not to love and be folicitous for it. For the freme Reason, he says, a wise Man will not engage himself in public Bufinefs: for he knew very well, what fuch an Engagement would oblige him to do: for what should restrain any one from Affairs, if we may behave among Men, as we would among a Swarm of Flies?

⁽a) This Paffage is obscure; and variously read, and explained by the Commentators. It is here translated conjecturally.

§. 2. And doth He, who knows all this, dare to bid us not bring up Children? Not even a Sheep, or a Wolf, deferts its Offspring; and shall Man? What would you have? That we should be as filly as Sheep? Yet even these do not desert their Offspring. Or as savage as Wolves? Neither do these desert them. Pray, who would mind you, if he saw his Child sallen upon the Ground, and crying? For my part, I am of Opinion, that your Father and Mother, even if they could have foreseen, that you would have been the Author of such Doctrines, would not, however, have thrown you away.

CHAPTER XXIV.

How we are to struggle with Difficulties.

§. 1. D Ifficulties are the Things that shew what Men are. For the future, on any Difficulty, remember, That God, like a (a) Master of Exercise, has engaged you with a rough Antagonist.

For what End?

⁽a) The Greek Word fignifies, a Perfon who used to anoint the Body of the Combatants: and prepare them, by proper Exercises for the Olympic Games.

That you may be a Conqueror, like one in the Olympic Games: and it cannot be without Toil. No Man, in my Opinion, has a more advantageous Difficulty on his Hands than you have; provided you will but use it, as an athletic Champion doth his Antagonist. We are now sending (b) a Spy to Rome: but no one ever fends a timorous Spy, who, when he only hears a Noife, or fees a Shadow, runs back, frighted out of his Wits, and fays; " The Enemy is just. " at hand," So now, if you should come and tell us: " Things are in a fearful Way at Rome: Death is terrible; " Banishment, terrible; Calumny, terrible; Poverty, ter-" rible: run, good People, the Enemy is at hand:" we will answer; Get you gone, and prophefy for yourself; our only Fault is, that we have fent fuch a Spy. Diogenes (c) was fent a Spy before you: but he told us other Tidings. He fays, That Death is no Evil; for it is nothing base: that Defamation is only the Noise of Madmen. And what ⁽b) Probably, according to Mr. Upton's Conjecture, χε should be σε. We send row.

Wolfius imagines this Paffage to allude to the Commotions after the Death of Nero; when there were many Competitors for the Empire; and every one was eager to take the Part of him who appeared to have the greateft Probability of Success.

⁽c) Diegenes, paffing through the Camp of Philip, at the Time that he was on his March againft the Greeks, was taken, and brought before the King; who, not knowing him, alked, If he was a Spy. Yes, certainly, Philip (andwered the Philiofopher), I am a Spy of your Incondicratenes, and Folly, in rifquing your Kingdom and Person, without any Necessity, upon the Hazard of a single Hour. Upron. The Story is thus told by Phitareb; but is related something differently by other Authors.

Account did this Spy give us of Pain? Of Pleafure? Of Poverty? He says, that, to be naked is better than a Purple Robe: to sleep upon the bare Ground the softest Bed: and gives a Proof of all he says, by his own Courage, Tranquillity, and Freedom; and, moreover, by a healthy and robust Body. There is no Enemy near, says he. All is profound Peace.—How so, Diogenes? Look upon me, says he. Am I hurt? Am I wounded? Have I run away from any one? This is such a Spy as he ought to be. But you come, and tell us one Thing after another. Go back again, and examine Things more exactly, and without Fear.

§. 2. What shall I do, then?

What do you do when you come out of a Ship? Do you take away the Rudder, or the Oars, along with you? What do you take, then? Your own, your Bottle, and your Bundle. So, in the prefent Cafe, if you will but remember what is your own, you will not claim what belongs to others. Are you bid to put off your Confular Robe?—Well: I am in my Equestrian. Put off that too.——I have only my Coat.——Put off that too.——Well: I am naked.——Still you raise my Envy.——Then e'en take my whole Body. If I can throw off a paultry Body, am I any longer afraid of a Tyrant (d)?

§. 5. But such a one will not leave me his Heir. What, then, have I forgot, that none of these Things is mine? How, then, do we call them mine? As a Bed, in an Inn. If the ⁽d) The Translation follows Mr. Upton's Reading.

Landlord, when he dies, leaves you the Beds; well and good: but, if to another, they will be his; and you will feek one elsewhere: and, consequently, if you do not find one, you will sleep upon the Ground: only sleep quiet, and shore foundly; and remember, that Tragedies have no other Subjects, but the Rich, and Kings, and Tyrants. No poor Man fills any other Place in one, than as Part of the Chorus: whereas Kings begin, indeed, with Prosperity. "Crown "the Palace with festive Garlands (e)."——But, then, about the third or fourth Act; "Alas, Citheron! why didst Thou "receive me!" Where are thy Crowns, Wretch; where is thy Diadem? Cannot thy Guards help thee?

Whenever you approach any of these then, remember, that you meet a Tragic Player; or, rather, not an Actor, but Oedipus himself.——But such a one is happy. He walks with a numerous Train. Well: I join myself with the Croud, and I too walk with a numerous Train.

§. 4. But, remember the principal thing; That the Door is open. Do not be more fearful than Children; but, as they, when the Play doth not pleafe them, fay; " I will " play no longer:" fo do you, in the fame Cafe, fay; " I will play no longer;" and go: but, if you flay, do not complain.

⁽e) An Allusion to the Oedipus of Sophocles.

CHAPTER XXV.

On the same Subject.

§. 1. If these Things are true; and we are not stupid, or acting a Part, when we say, that the Good or Ill of Man consists in Choice, and that all besides is nothing to us; why are we still troubled? Why do we still sear? What hath been our Concern, is in no one's Power: what is in the Power of others, we do not regard. What Embarrassiment have we left?

But direct me.

Why should I direct you? Hath not Jupiter directed you? Hath he not given you what is your own, incapable of Restraint, or Hindrance; and what is not your own, liable to both? What Directions, then, what Orders, have you brought from him? "By all Methods keep what is " your own: what belongs to others, do not covet. Honesty " is your own: a Sense of virtuous Shame is your own. "Who, then, can deprive you of these? Who can restrain " you from making use of them, but yourself? And how " do you do it? When you make that your Concern " which is not your own, you lose what is." Having such Precepts and Directions from Jupiter, what fort do you ftill want from me? Am I better than He? More worthy of Credit? If you observe these, what others do you need? Or are not these Directions bis? Produce your natural Preconceptions: produce the Demonstrations of Philosophers: produce produce what you have often heard, and what you have faid yourfelf; what you have read, and what you have ftudied.

How long is it right to observe these Things, and not break up the Game?

As long as it goes on agreeably. A King is chosen at the Saturnalian Festival (for it was agreed to play at that Game): he orders; "Do you drink: you mix the Wine: you fing: "you go: you come." I obey; that the Game may not be broken up by my Fault.——"Well: but you think "yourself to be unhappy." I do not think so: and who shall compel me to think so? Again: we agree to play Agamennon and Achilles. He who is appointed for Agamennon, says to me; "Go to Achilles, and force away Bri-"feis." I go. "Come." I come.

§. 2. We should converse in Life as we do in hypothetical Arguments. "Suppose it to be Night."——Well: suppose it.——"Is it Day, then?" No: for I admitted the Hypothesis, that it is Night.—"Suppose, that you think it to be "Night."——Well: suppose it.——But think also, in reality, that it is Night."——That doth not follow from the Hypothesis. Thus, too, in the other Case. Suppose you have ill Luck.——Suppose it.——"Are you, then, unlucky?"——Yes.——"Have you some cross Demon."——Yes.——"Well: "but think too [in carness], that you are unhappy."——This doth not follow from the Hypothesis: and there is one who forbids me [to think so].

How long, then, are we to obey fuch Orders?

As long as it is worth while: that is, as long as I preserve what is becoming and fit.

§. 3. Further: fome are peevifh and fastidious; and fay, I cannot dine with fuch a Fellow, to be obliged to hear him all Day recounting, how he fought in Mysa. "I told you, "my Friend, how I gained the Eminence. There I am "befieged again." But another fays, "I had rather get a Dinner, and hear him prate as much as he pleases."

Do you compare the Value of these Things, and judge for yourself: but do not let it be with Depression, and Anxiety; and with a Supposition, that you are unhappy: for no one compels you to that. Is the House in a Smoke? If it be a moderate one, I will stay: if a very great one, I will go out. For you must always remember, and hold to this, that the Door is open. "Well: do not live at Nicopolis."——I will not live there.—"Nor at Athens."——Well: nor at Athens.—"Or at a Rome."——Nor at Rome neither.——"But you shall live at Gyaros (a)."——I will live there. But living at Gyaros seems to me like living in a great Smoke. I will retire where no one can forbid me to live; (for that Abode is open to all) and put off my last (b) Garment, this paultry Body of mine: beyond this, no one hath any Power over me. Thus Demetrius said to Nero; "You sentence me to Death;

⁽a) An Island in the Ægean Sea, to which the Romans used to banish Criminals.

⁽b) The Body, which Epitetus here compares to a Garment, is, by the facred Writers, reprefented under the Figure of a Houfe, or Tabernacle, Yob iv. 19. 2 Pet. i. 13, 14. St. Paul, with a fublime Rapidity of Expredion, joins the two Metaphors together, 2 Cor. v. 2—4. as, indeed, the one is but a loofer, the other a clofer Covering. The fame Apostle hath made use of the Figure of Clothing, in another Place, in a strikingly beautiful Manner, 1 Cor. xv. 53, 54.

and Nature, you (c);" If I place my Admiration on Body, I give myfelf up for a Slave: if on an Effate, the fame: for I immediately betray myfelf, how I may be taken. Juft as when a Snake pulls in his Head, I fay, Strike that Part of him which he guards: and be you affured, that whatever you fhew a Defire to guard, there your Mafter will attack you. Remember but this, whom will you any longer flatter, or fear?

But I want to fit where the Senators do.

Do not you fee, that by this you straiten yourself? You squeeze yourself?

Why, how else shall I see the Show, in the Amphitheatre cleverly?

Do not fee it [at all], Man; and you will not be fqueezed. Why do you give yourfelf Trouble? Or wait a little while; and when the Show is over, go fit in the Senators Places, and fun yourfelf. For remember, that this holds univerfally; we fqueeze ourfelves; we ftraiten ourfelves: that is; our own Principles fqueeze and straiten us. What is it to be reviled, for Instance? Stand by a Stone, and revile it; and what will you get? If you, therefore, would hear like a Stone, what would your Reviler be the better? But, if the Reviler hath the Weakness of the Reviled for an Advantage-ground, then he carries his Point.----- Strip "him." "What do you mean by bim?" "Take my ⁽c) Anaxogora: is faid, by fome, and Socrates, by others, to have made the fame Speech, on receiving the News of his being condemned to Death by the Judges of Athons: and from one of them, probably, Demetrius borrowed it. Demetrius was a Cynic Philosopher; and is mentioned with high Approbation by Seneca.

[&]quot; Clothes;

- "Clothes; ftrip off them [if you will]."---" I have put an "Affront upon you."---" Much Good may it do you."
- §. 4. These Things were the Study of Socrates; and, by this means, he always preserved the same Countenance. But we had rather exercise and study any thing, than how to become unrestrained and free.

The Philosophers talk Paradoxes.

And are there not Paradoxes in other Arts? What is more paradoxical, than the pricking any one's Eye, to make him fee? If a Person was to tell this to one ignorant of Surgery, would not he laugh at him? Where is the Wonder then, if, in Philosophy too, many Truths appear Paradoxes to the Ignorant?

CHAPTER XXVI.

What the Law of Life is.

§. 1. A S one [of his Scholars] was reading hypothetical Syllogifins; it is likewife a Law in thefe, fays Epitetus, to admit what follows from the Hypothefis: but much more is it a Law in Life, to do what follows from Nature. For, if we defire in every Subject of Action, and in every Circumflance, to keep up to Nature; we must, on every Occafion, evidently make it our Aim, neither to let Consequences cscape our Observation, nor to admit Contradictions. Philosophers, therefore, first exercise us in Theory, which is the more easy Task, and then lead us to the more difficult: for in Theory, there is nothing to oppose our following what we are taught; but in Life, there are many Things to draw us aside. It is ridiculous then, to say, we must begin from these: for it is not easy to begin from the most difficult: and this Excuse must be made to those Parents, who dislike that their Children should learn philosophical Speculations. --- "Am I to blame then, Sir, and ignorant of my Duty, " and of what is incumbent on me? If this is neither to be " learnt, nor taught, why do you find fault with me? If it " is to be taught, pray teach me yourfelf: or, if you cannot, " give me Leave to learn it from those who profess to under-" ftand it. Besides: do you think that I voluntarily fall into " Evil, and miss of Good? Heaven forbid! What, then, " is the Cause of my Faults?" Ignorance. " Are you not " willing then, that I should get rid of my Ignorance? " Who was ever taught the Art of Music, or Navigation, " by Anger? Do you expect then, that your Anger should " teach me the Art of Living?"----This, however, is allowed to be faid only by one who really hath that Intention. he who reads these Things, and applies to the Philosophers, merely for the fake of shewing, at an Entertainment, that he understands hypothetical Syllogisms; what doth he do it for, but to be admired by fome Senator, who happens to fit near him(a)....

§. 2. I once faw a Person weeping and embracing the Knees of Epaphroditus; and deploring his hard Fortune, that he had not 50,000 l. left. What faid Epaphroditus, then? Did he laugh at him, as we should do? No: but cried out with Astonishment, Poor Man! How could you be filent? How could you beargit?

⁽a) The Text is fo very corrupt in some Parts of this Chapter, that the Translation must have been wholly conjectural; and therefore is omitted.

§. 3. The first Step, therefore, towards becoming a Philosopher, is, being sensible in what State the ruling Faculty of the Mind is: for, when a Person knows it to be in a weak one, he will not immediately employ it in great Attempts. But, for want of this, some, who can scarce get down a Morsel, buy, and set themselves to swallow, whole Treatises; and so they throw them up again, or cannot digest them: and then come Cholics, Fluxes, and Fevers. Such Persons ought to consider what they can bear. Indeed, it is easy to convince an ignorant Person in Theory; but in Matters relating to Life, no one offers himself to Conviction; and we hate those who have convinced us. Socrates used to say, that we ought not to live a Life unexamined.

CHAPTER XXVII.

Of the foveral Appearances of Things to the Mind: and what Remedies are to be provided for them.

§. 1. PPEARANCES to the Mind are of Four Kinds.
Things are either what they appear to be: or they neither are, nor appear to be: or they are, and do not appear to be: or they are not, and yet appear to be. To form a right Judgment in all these Cases, belongs only to the completely Instructed. But whatever presses, to that a Remedy

Remedy must be applied. If the Sophistries of Pyrrbonism (a), or the Academy, press us, the Remedy must be applied there: if specious Appearances, by which Things seem to be good which are not so, let us seek for a Remedy there. If it be Custom which presses us, we must endeavour to find a Remedy against that.

What Remedy is to be found against Custom?

A contrary Cuftom. You hear the Vulgar fay, "Such a one, poor Soul! is dead."---Why, his Father died: his Mother died.----" Ay: but he was cut off in the Flower of

For a more complete Account of the System of Pyyrlo, see Diog. LAERT, in his Life. And LIFSIUS Manushet, ad Stoic. Philosoph. B. ii. Dist. 3.

⁽a) Pyrrho, the Founder of the Sect of the Pyrrhonists, was born at Elis, and flourished about the Time of Alexander. He held, That there is no Difference between Just and Unjust, Good and Evil: that all Things are equally indifferent, uncertain, and undiffinguishable: that neither our Senses or Understanding give us either a true or a false Information: therefore, that we ought to give them no Credit; but to remain without Opinion; without Motion; without Inclination: and to fay of every thing, that it no more is, than it is not; that it is no more one thing than another; and that against one Reason, there is always an equal Reason to be opposed. His Life is said to have been conformable to his Principles; for that he never avoided any thing: and his Friends were obliged to follow him, to prevent his running under the Wheels of a Coach, or walking down a Precipice. But these Stories, perhaps, are nothing but mere Invention; formed to expose the Absurdities of his System. Once, when he saw his Master Anaxarchus sallen into a Ditch, he passed by him, without offering him any Assistance. Anaxarchus was confistent enough with his Principles, not to suffer Pyrrho to he blamed for this tranquil Behaviour: which he justified, as a laudable Instance of Indifference, and Want of Affection. A fine Picture this, of fceptical Friendship!

"his Age, and in a foreign Land."—Hear the contrary Ways of Speaking: withdraw yourfelf from these Expressions. Oppose to one Custom, a contrary Custom; to Sophistry, the Art of Reasoning, and the frequent Use and Exercise of it. Against specious Appearances, we must have clear Pre-conceptions, brighten'd up, and ready. When Death appears as an Evil, we ought immediately to remember, that Evils may be avoided, but Death is Necessity. For what can I do, or where can I sly from it? Let me suppose myself to be Sarpedon, the Son of Jove, that I may speak in the same gallant Way.

Brave tho' we die, and honour'd if we live; Or let us Glory gain, or Glory give. POPE-

If I can atchieve nothing myself, I will not envy another the Honour of doing some gallant Action. But suppose this to be a Strain too high for us; are not we capable [at least] of arguing thus?——Where shall I sly from Death? Shew me the Place; shew me the People, to whom I may have Recourse, whom Death doth not overtake. Shew me the Charm to avoid it. If there be none, what would you have me do? I cannot escape Death: but (b) cannot I escape the Dread of it? Must I die trembling, and lamenting? For the Origin of the Discase is, withing for something that is not obtained. In consequence of this, if I can bring over Externals to my own Inclination, I do it: if not, I want to tear out the Eyes of whoever hinders me. For it is the Nature of

⁽b) The Translation follows Mr. Upton's Reading, το φοθεισθαι

Man, not to bear the being deprived of Good; not to bear the falling into Evil. And fo, at laft, when I can neither bring over Things [to my own Inclination], nor tear out the Eyes of him who hinders me, I fit down, and groan, and revile him whom I can; Jupiter, and the reft of the Gods (c). For what are they to me, if they take no care of me?

Oh! but you will be guilty of Impiety.

What then? Can I be in a worfe Condition than I am now? In general, remember this, That, unless Piety and Interest be placed in the same Thing, Piety cannot be preserved in any mortal Breast.

§ 2. Do not these Things seem to have Force (d)? Let a Pyrrbonis, or an Academic, come and oppose them. For my part, I am not at leisure; nor able to stand up as an Advocate for general Consent. Even if the Business were concerning an Estate, I should call in another Advocate. With what Advocate, then, am I contented [in the present Case]? With any that may be upon the Spot. I may be at a Loss, perhaps, to give a Reason, how Sensation is performed: whether it be disfused universally, or reside in a particular Part: for I find Difficulties that shock me, in each

⁽c) The blafphemous Impatience, here introduced, refembles that which is ftrongly deferibed, in a few Words, If wiii. 21.——When they shall be bungry, they shall fret themselves; and curse their King, and their God, and look upward.

⁽d) This is spoken in Opposition to the Sceptics, who are alluded to in the Beginning of the Chapter; and who say, that no Argument hath any Force.

Case: but, that you and I are not the same Person, I very exactly know.

How fo?

Why, I never, when I have a mind to fwallow any thing, carry it to your Mouth; but my own. I never, when I wanted to take a Loaf, took a Brush: but went directly to the Loaf, as fit to answer my Purpose. And do you your-felves, who deny all Evidence of the Senses, act any otherwise? Who of you, when he intended to go into a Bath, ever went into a Mill?

What, then, must not we, to the utmost, defend these Points? support the general Consent [of Mankind]? be fortified against every thing that opposes it (e)?

Who denies That? But it must be done by him who hath Abilities; who hath Leisure: but he, who is full of Trembling and Perturbation, and inward Disorders of Heart, must employ his Time about something else.

⁽e) This feems to be faid by one of the Hearers, who wanted to have the Abfurdities of the Sceptics confuted, and guarded againft, by regular Argument. Epitātus allows this to be right, for fuch as have Abilities and Leifure: but recommends to others, the more neceffary Tafk, of curing their own moral Diforders: and infinuates, that the mere common Occurrences of Life are fufficient to overthrow the Notions of the Pyrrhonifts.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

That we are not to be angry with Mankind. What Things are little, what great, among Men.

§. 1. WHAT is the Cause of Assent to any thing? Its appearing to be true.

It is not possible, therefore, to assent to what appears to be not true.

Why?

Because it is the very Nature of the Understanding, to agree to Truth; to be disflatissied with Falshood; and to suspend its Belief, in doubtful Cases.

What is the Proof of this?

Perfuade yourself, if you can, that it is now Night. Impossible.

Unperfuade yourfelf, that it is Day.

Impossible.

Perfuade yourfelf, that the Stars are, or are not, even. Impossible.

§. 2. When any one, then, affents to what is false, be affured, that he doth not wilfully affent to it, as salse (for, as Plate affirms, the Soul is never voluntarily deprived of Truth): but what is false, appears to him to be true. Well, then: Have we, in Actions, any thing correspondent to True and False, in Propositions?

Duty, and contrary to Duty: Advantageous, and Difadvantageous: Suitable, and Unfuitable; and the like.

A Person then, cannot think a Thing advantageous to him, and not chuse it.

He cannot. But how fays Medea?

- " I know what Evils wait my dreadful Purpose;
- " But vanquish'd Reason yields to powerful Rage."

Because she thought, that very Indulgence of her Rage, and the punishing her Husband, more advantageous than the Preservation of her Children.

Yes: but she is deceived.

Shew clearly to her, that she is deceived, and she will forbear: but, till you have shewn it, what is she to follow, but what appears to herself?

Nothing.

Why, then, are you angry (a) with her, that the unhappy Woman is deceived, in the most important Points; and, infead of a human Creature, becomes a Viper? Why do not you rather, as we pity the Blind and Lame, so likewise pity those who are blinded and lamed, in their superior Faculties? Whoever, therefore, duly remembers, that the Appearance of Things to the Mind is the Standard of every Action to Man: that this is either right or wrong: and, if right, he is without Fault; if wrong, he himself bears the Punishment: for that one Man cannot be the Person deceived, and another the Sufferer: will not be outrageous and angry at any one; will not revile, or reproach, or hate, or quarrel with, any one.

⁽a) Sec Note a, c. 18. §. 1.

§ 3. So then, Have all the great and dreadful Deeds, that have been done in the World, no other Original than Appearance?

Absolutely, no other. The Iliad consists of nothing but the Appearances [of Things to the Mind]; and the Use of those Appearances. It appeared [right] to Paris, to carry off the Wise of Menelaus. It appeared [right] to Menelaus, to persuade himself, that it was an Advantage to be robbed of such a Wise, what would have happened? Not only the Iliad had been lost, but the Odyssey too.

Do these great Events then, depend on so small a Cause? What are these Events, which you call great?

Wars, and Seditions; the Destruction of Numbers of Men; and the Overthrow of Cities.

And what great Matter is there in all this? Nothing. What great Matter is there in the Death of Numbers of Oxen, Numbers of Sheep, or in the burning or pulling down! Numbers of Nefts of Storks or Swallows?

Are these like Cases, then?

Perfectly like. The Bodies of Men are destroyed, and the Bodies of Sheep and Oxen. The Houses of Men are burnt, and the Nests of Storks. What is there great or dreadful in all this? Pray, shew me what Difference there is between the House of a Man, and the Nest of a Stork, so far as it is a Habitation (b), excepting that Houses are built with Beams, and Tiles, and Bricks; and Nests, with Sticks and Clay?

⁽b) The Order of the following Words is diffurbed in the Original. The Translation follows Mr. Upton's Correction.

What, then, is a Stork and a Man a like Thing? What do you mean?

With regard to Body, extremely like.

Is there no Difference, then, between a Man and a Stork? Yes, furely: but not in these Things.

In what, then?

Enquire; and you will find, that the Difference confifts in fomething elfe. See whether it be not, in acting with Difcernment: whether it be not, in a focial Difposition; in Fidelity, Honour, Steadiness, Judgment.

§. 4. Where then, is the great Good or Evil of Man? Where his Difference is. If This is preferved, and remains well fortified, and neither Honour, Fidelity, or Judgment, is destroyed, then he himself is preserved likewise: but, when any of these is lost and demolished, he himself is lost alfo. In This do all great Events confift. Paris, they fay, was undone, because the Greeks invaded Troy, and laid it wafte; and his Family were flain in Battle. By no means: for no one is undone by an Action, not his own. All that was only laying waste the Nests of Storks. But his true Undoing was, when he loft the modest, the faithful, the hospitable, and the decent Character. When was Achilles undone? When Patroclus died? By no means. But when he gave himself up to Rage; when he wept over a Girl; when he forgot, that he came there, not to get Miftreffes, but to fight. This is human Undoing; this is the Siege; this the Overthrow; when right Principles are ruined; when these are destroyed.

But, when Wives and Children are led away Captives, and the Men themselves killed, are not these, Evils?

Whence do you conclude them fuch? Pray inform me, in my Turn.

Nay: but whence do you affirm, that they are not Evils?

§. 5. Let us recur to the Rules. Produce the Pre-conceptions. One cannot fufficiently wonder at what happens, in this Respect. When we would judge of Light and Heavy, we do not judge by Guess: when of Strait and Crooked, not by Guess: and, in general, when it concerns us to know the Truth of any Particular, no one of us will do any thing, by Guess. But, where the first and principal Cause is concerned, of acting either right or wrong; of being prosperous or unprosperous, happy or unhappy; there only do we act rashly, and by Guess. No-where any thing like a Balance ; no-where any thing like a Rule: but some Fancy strikes me, and I instantly act conformably to it. For am I better than Agamemnon or Achilles; that they, by following their Fancies, should do and fuffer so many Things, and Fancy not fuffice me? And what Tragedy hath any other Original? The Atreus of Euripides, what is it? Fancy. The Oedipus of Sophocles? Fancy. The Phanix? The Hippolytus? All Fancy. To what Character, then, doth it belong, think you, to take no care of this Point? What are they called who follow every Fancy?

Madmen.

Do we, then, behave any otherwise?

CHAPTER XXIX.

Of Intrepidity.

§, I. THE Essence of Good and Evil, is a certain Disposition of the Choice.

What are Externals, then?

Materials to the Faculty of Choice: in the Management of which, it will attain its own Good or Evil.

How, then, will it attain Good?

If it doth not admire the Materials themselves: for right Principles, concerning these Materials, conflitute a good Choice: but perverse and distorted Principles, a bad one. This Law hath God ordained, who says; "If you wish for "Good, receive it from Yourself." You say, No: but from Another.——"Nay; but from Yourself." In consequence of this, when a Tyrant threatens, and sends for me; I say, Against what is your Threatning pointed? If he says, "I will chain you;" I answer, It is my Hands and Feet that you threaten. If he says, "I will cut off your Head;" I answer, It is my Head that you threaten. If he says, "I will throw you into Prison;" I answer, It is the Whole of this paultry Bady that you threaten: and, if he threatens Banishment, just the same.

Doth not he threaten you, then?

If I am perfuaded, that these Things are nothing to me, he doth not: but, if I fear any of them, it is me that he threatens. Whom, after all, is it that I fear? The Master of what? Of Things in my own Power? Of these no one is the Master. Of Things not in my Power? And what are these to me?

§. 2. What, then! do you Philosophers teach us a Contempt of Kings?

By no means. Who of us teaches any one to contend with them, about Things of which they have the Command? Take my Body; take my Poffeffions; take my Reputation; take those who are about me. If I persuade any one to contend for these Things, as his own, accuse me, with Justice.——"Ay: but I would command your Principles "too."——And who hath given you that Power? How can you conquer the Principle of another?——By applying Terror, I will conquer it:——Do not you see, that (a) what conquers itself, is not conquered by another? And nothing but itself can conquer the Choice. Hence, too, the most excellent and equitable Law of God; that the Better should always prove superior to the Worse. Ten are better than One.

To what Purpose?

For chaining, killing, dragging where they please; for taking away an Estate. Thus Ten conquer One, in the Instance wherein they are better.

In what, then, are they worse?

When the one hath right Principles, and the others have not. For can they conquer in this Point? How should they? If we were weighed in a Scale, must not the Heavier outweigh?

 ⁽a) The Sense of this Passage seems to require that the first αντο should be read φ.

- §. 3. That ever Socrates should suffer such Things from the Athenians !
- Wretch! what do you mean by (b) Socrates? Express the Fact as it is. That ever the poor paultry Body of Socrates should be carried away, and dragged to Prison, by such as were stronger [than itself]: that ever any one should give Hemlock to the Body of Socrates; and that it should expire! Do tbese Things appear wonderful to you? These Things unjust? Is it for such Things as tbese that you accuse God? Had Socrates, then, no Equivalent for them? In what, then, to him, did the Essence of Good consist? Whom shall we mind; you, or him? And what doth he say? "Anysus and "Melisus (e) may indeed kill; but hurt me they cannot." And again; "If it so pleases God, so let it be."
- §. 4. But shew me, that he who hath the worse Principles, gets the Advantage over him, who hath the better. You never will shew it, nor any thing like it: for the Law of Nature and of God, is this; Let the Better be always superior to the Worse.

In what?

⁽b) Socrates, being asked by Crite, in what manner he would be buried? answered, As you please; if you can lay hold on me, and I do not cleape from you. Then, smiling, and turning to his Friends, I cannot, says he, persuade Crite, that I, who am now disputing, and ranging the Parts of my Discourse, am Socrates: but he thinks the Corpse, which will soon behold, to be me; and, therefore, asks how he must bury me. Plano, in Phead. §. 64. FORSTER'S Edition.

⁽c) The two principal Accusers of Socrates.

In that, wherein it is better. One Body is stronger than another: Many than One; and a Thief, than one who is not a Thief. Thus I, too, lost my Lamp; because the Thief was better at keeping awake, than I. But he bought a Lamp, at the Price of being a Thief, a Rogue, and a wild Beast. This seemed to him a good Bargain: and much Good may it do him l

§. 5. Well: but one takes me by the Coat, and draws me to the Forum; and then all the reft bawl out----" Phi"losopher, what Good do your Principles do you? See, you are dragging to Prison: see, you are going to lose
"your Head!"——And, pray what Rule of Philosophy could I contrive, that, when a stronger than myself lays hold on my Coat, I should not be dragged? Or that, when ten Men pull me at once, and throw me into Prison, I should not be thrown there? But have I learnt nothing, then? I have learnt to know, whatever happens, that, if it is not a Matter of Choice, it is nothing to me. Have my Principles, then, done me no Good (d)? What, then! do I seek for any thing else to do me Good, but what I have learnt? Afterwards, as I sit in Prison, I say: He, who makes this Outcry, neither hears what Signal is given, nor under⁽d) This is evidently a Continuation of the Philosopher's Answer to those who reproached him, that his Principles had done him no Good; and, therefore, is translated in the first Person, though it is ωφελωσεια and ζωτιω; in the Greek. This sudden Change of the Person, is very frequent in Epicletus; but would often diffurb the Sense, if it was preferred in a Translation. Perhaps ωφελωσεια is a Miltake, for ωφελωμει; as M, Σ are the same Letters differently turned.

ftands what is faid; nor is it any Concern to him, to know what Philosophers fay, or do. Let him alone.—[Well: but I am bid] to come out of Prison again.—If you have no further Need for me, in Prison, I will come out: if you want me again, I will return.—" For how long [will you "go on thus?]"—Just as long as (e) Reason requires I should continue in this paultry Body: when that is over, take it, and sare ye well. Only let not this be done inconsiderately; nor from Cowardice; nor upon every slight Pretence: for that, again, would be contrary to the Will of God: for he hath Need of such a World, and such [Creatures] to live on Earth. But, if he sounds a Retreat, as he did to Socrates, we are to obey him, when he sounds it, as our General.

§. 6. Well: but are these Things to be said to the World? For what Purpose? Is it not sufficient to be convinced one's self? When Children come to us, clapping their Hands, and saying; "To-morrow is the good Feast of Saturn:" do we tell them, that Good doth not consist in such Things? By no means: but we clap our Hands along with them. Thus, when you are unable to convince any one, consider him as a Child, and clap your Hands with him: or, if you will not do that, at least hold your Tongue. These Things we ought to remember; and, when we are called to any

Difficulty,

⁽c) The Meaning of Epitletus in this Paffage is not clear. If he is fpeaking of a voluntary Death, which fome of his Exprefions plainly imply, the Inflance of Secrets feems improperly chofen: for he did not kill himfelf; but was fentenced by the Laws of his Country: to which, indeed, he paid fo great a Reverence, as to refuse all the Affiftance which was offered by his Friends, in order to his Ecape.

Difficulty, know, that an Opportunity is come, of shewing whether we have been well taught. For he who goes from a philosophical Lecture to a difficult Point of Practice, is like a young Man who has been fludying to folve Syllogifms. If you propose an easy one, he says; Give me rather a fine intricate one, that I may try my Strength. Even athletic Champions are displeased with a slight Antagonist. not lift me, fays one. This is a Youth of Spirit. No: but, I warrant you, when the Occasion calls upon him, he must fall a crying, and fay; " I wanted to learn a little longer " first." --- Learn what? If you did not learn these Things to shew them in Practice, why did you learn them at all? I am perfuaded there must be some one among you who sit here, that feels fecret Pangs of Impatience, and fays; " When " will fuch a Difficulty come to my Share, as hath now fallen " to his? Must I sit wasting my Life in a Corner, when I " might be crowned at Olympia? When will any one bring " the News of fuch a Combat, for me?" Such should be the Disposition of you all. Even among the Gladiators of Casar. there are some who bear it very ill, that they are not brought upon the Stage, and match'd; and who offer Vows to God, and address the Officers, begging to fight. And will none among you, appear fuch? I would willingly take a Voyage, on purpose to see how a Champion of mine acts; how he treats his Subject.---" I do not chuse such a Subject," say you.---Is it in your Power, then, to take what Subject you chuse? Such a Body is given you; fuch Parents, fuch Brothers, fuch a Country, and fuch a Rank in it; and, then, you come to me, and fay, " Change my Subject." Befides, have not you Abilities to manage that which is given you? It is your Business, [we should fay] to propose; mine, to treat the Subject well .-- " No. But do not propose such an Argument " to me; but fuch a one: do not offer fuch an Objection " to me; but such a one."---There will be a Time, I suppose, when Tragedians will fancy themselves to be mere Masks, and Buskins, and long Train. These Things are your Materials; Man, and your Subject. Speak fomething; that we may know, whether you are a Tragedian, or a Buffoon: for both have all the rest, in common. If any one, therefore, should take away his Buskins, and his Mask, and bring him upon the Stage, in his (f) common Dress, is the Tragedian loft, or doth he remain? If he hath a Voice, he remains. " Here, this Inftant, take upon you the Com-" mand." I take it; and, taking it, I shew how a Person, who hath been properly instructed, behaves .--- " Lav afide " your Robe; put on Rags, and come upon the Stage in " that Character." ---- What then? Is it not in my Power to bring a good Voice [and Manner] along with me?---" In " what Character do you now appear?" As a (g) Witness cited by God .--- "Come you, then, and bear witness for " me; for you are a Witness worthy of being produced by " me. Is any thing, external to the Choice, either Good " or Evil? Do I hurt any one? Have I placed the Good ⁽f) Φαινολη. Lord Shaftesbury.

⁽g) This imaginary Witness, first extolled, then failing in his Testimony, brings to one's Mind, with unspeakable Advantage, that true and faithful Winess, who hath so fully attended the far more important Doctrines of Pardon, Grace, and everlasting Life: and taught Men, on this Foundation, not to be afraid of them that kill the Body; and, after that, have no more that they can do.

" of each Individual in any one, but in himself? What "Evidence do you give for God?"—I am in a miserable Condition, O Lord (b); I am undone: no Mortal cares for me: no Mortal gives me any thing: all blame me; all speak ill of me.—Is this the Evidence you are to give? And will you bring Disgrace upon his Citation, who hath conferred such an Honour upon you, and thought you worthy of being produced as a Witness in such a Cause?

§. 7. But he who hath the Power, hath given Sentence. " I judge you to be impious and profane."---- What hath befallen you?----I have been judged to be impious and profane---Any thing elfe ?----Nothing.----Suppose he had pass'd his Judgment upon an hypothetical Proposition, and pronounced it to be a false Conclusion, that, if it be Day, it is light; what would have befallen the Proposition? In this Cafe, who is judged; who condemned; the Proposition, or he who is deceived, concerning it? Doth he, who hath the Power of pronouncing any thing, concerning you, know what Pious, or Impious, mean? Hath he made it his Study, or learned it? Where? From whom? A Musician would not regard him, if he pronounced Bass to be Treble: nor a Mathematician, if he pass'd Sentence, that Lines drawn from the Center to the Circle, are not equal. And shall He, who is truly learned, regard an unlearned Man, when he pronounces upon Pious and Impious, Just and Unjust?

⁽b) It hash been observed, that this manner of Expression is not to be met with in the Heathen Authors before Christianity: and the war, it is one Inflance of Scripture Language coming early into certain U.E.

§ 8. "Oh the Injuries to which the Learned are exposed!"

§ 18. "Oh the Injuries to which the Learned are expoded!" Is it here that you have learn'd this? Why do not you leave such pitiful Reasonings to idle pitiful Fellows (i); and let them sit in a Corner, and receive some little forry Pay; or grumble, that nobody gives them any thing? But do you appear, and make use of what you have learn'd. It is not Reasonings that are wanted now. On the contrary; Books are stuffed full of Stoical Reasonings.

What is wanted, then?

One to apply them; whose Actions may bear Testimony to his Doctrines. Assume me this Character, that we may no longer make use of the Examples of the Ancients, in the Schools; but may have some Example of our own.

§. 9. To whom, then, doth the Contemplation of these [speculative Reasonings] belong?

To him, that hath Leifure. For Man is an Animal fond of Contemplation. But it is shameful to take a View of these Things, as run-away Slaves do of a Play. We are to fit quietly, and listen, sometimes to the Actor, and sometimes to the Musician: and not do like those, who come in and praise the Actor, and at the same time, look round them every Way: then, if any one happens to name their Master, are frighted out of their Wits, and run off. It is shameful for a Philosopher, thus to contemplate the Works of Nature. Now, what, in this Case, is the Master? Man is not the Master of Man; but Death, and Life, and Pleasure, and Pain: for without these, bring Cassar to me, and you will fee, how intrepid I shall be. But, if he comes thundering and lightening with the fe; and the fe are the Objects of my Terror; what do I elfe, but, like the run-away Slave, acknowlege my Master? While I have any Respite from the se, as the Fugitive comes into the Theatre, so I bathe, drink, sing; but all, with Terror and Anxiety. But, if I free myself from my Masters, that is, from such Things as render a Master terrible, what Trouble, what Master have I remaining?

⁽i) The mercenary Profesiors of Philosophy, at that time.

§. 10. What, then, are we to publish these Things to all Men?

No. But humour the Vulgar, and fay; This poor Man advifes me to what he thinks good for himfelf. I excufe him: for Socrates, too, excufed the Jailer, who wept when he was to drink the Poifon: and faid, "How heartily he "Inels Tears for us." Was it to him that Socrates faid, "For this Reason we sent the Women out of the Way?" No: but to his Friends; to such, as were capable of hearing it; while he humoured the other, as a Child.

$\frac{\mathrm{d}_{\mathrm{color}}}{\mathrm{d}_{\mathrm{color}}} = \mathbf{C} \ \mathbf{H} \ \mathbf{A} \ \mathbf{P} \ \mathbf{T} \ \mathbf{E} \ \mathbf{R} \quad \mathbf{XXX}.$

July 10 5 CO

What we ought to have ready, in difficult Circumstances.

HEN you are going to any one of the Great, remember, that there is Another, who fees from Above, what paties; and whom you ought to please, rather than Man. He, therefore, asks you:

In the Schools, what did you use to call Exile, and Prison, and Chains, and Death, and Defamation?

108 The Discourses, &c. Book I.

I? Indifferent Things.

What, then, do you call them now? Are they at all changed?

No.

Are you changed, then?

No.

Tell me, then, what Things are indifferent.

Things independent on Choice.

Tell me the Confequence too.

Things independent on Choice, are nothing to me.

Tell me, likewife, what appeared to us, to be the Good of Man.

A right Choice, and a [right] Use of the Appearances of Things.

What his End?

To follow Thee.

Do you say the same Things now, too?

Yes. I do fay the fame Things, even now.

Well, go in, then, boldly, and mindful of these Things; and he [to whom you are going] will see, what a Youth, who hath studied what he ought, is among Men, who have not. I protest, I imagine you will have such Thoughts as these: "Why do we provide so many and great Qualifications, for " nothing? Is the Power, the Antichamber, the Attendants,

" the Guards, no more than this? Is it for these, that I " have liften'd to fo many Differtations? These are nothing:

" and I had qualified myfelf as for fome great Encounter."

END of the FIRST BOOK.

THE:

DISCOURSES

O F

EPICTETUS

BOOK II.

CHAPTER I.

That Courage is not inconfistent with Caution.

§.i.

HAT is afferted by the Philosophers may, perhaps, appear a Paradox to some: let us, however, examine, as well as we can, whether this be true; That it is possible in all Things, to act at once with Caution and Courage: For Caution feems, in fome measure, contrary to Courage: and Contraries are by no means confishent. The Appearance of a Paradox to many, in the present Case, seems to me to arise from something like this:

The Discourses of Book II.

If, indeed, we affert, that Courage and Caution are to be used, in the same Instances, we should justly be accused of uniting Contradictions: but, in the Way that we affirm it. where is the Abfurdity? For, if what hath been so often said, and so often demonstrated, be certain, that the Essence of Good and Evil confifts in the Use of the Appearances; and that Things independent on Choice, are not of the Nature either of Good or Evil; what Paradox do the Philosophers affert, if they fay: " Where Things are not dependent on "Choice, be couragious: where they are, be cautious?" For in these only, if Evil consists in a bad Choice, is Caution to be used. And if Things independent on Choice, and not in our Power, are nothing to us, in these we are to make use of Courage. Thus we shall be at once cautious and couragious: and, indeed, couragious on the Account of this very Caution; for, by using Caution with regard to Things really evil, we shall gain Courage, with regard to what are not fo.

HO

§. 2. But we are in the same Condition as [hunted] Deer: when these, in a Fright, fly from the Feathers (a), where do they turn, and to what do they retire for Safety? To the Toils. And thus they are undone, by inverting the Objects of Fear and Confidence. Thus we, too. In what Instances do we make use of Fear? In Things independent on Choice. In what, on the other hand, do we behave with Courage, as if there were nothing to be dreaded? In Things dependent on Choice. To be deceived then, or to act rashly or impudently, or to indulge an ignominious Defire, is of no Importance to us, if we do but take a good Aim, in Things independent on Choice. But where Death, or Exile, or Pain, or Ignominy, are concerned, there is the Retreat, there, the Flutter and Fright. Hence, as it must be with those who err in Matters of the greatest Importance, what is naturally Courage, we render bold, desperate, rash, and impudent: and what is naturally Caution, timid and base, and full of Fears and Perturbations. For if a Person was to transfer Caution to Choice, and the Actions of Choice, by a Willingues to be cautious, he will, at the same time, have it in his Power to avoid [what he guards against:] but if he transfers it to Things not in our Power, or Choice, by fixing his Aversion on what is not in our own Power, but dependent on others, he will necessarily fear; he will be hurried; will be disturbed. For it is not Death, or Pain, that is to be feared; but the Fear of Pain, or Death. Hence we commend him who fays;

⁽a) This was a Kind of Scare-crow, formed of different coloured Feathers, by which the Animal was terrified, and so driven into the Netwhich was the ancient Manner of Hunting.

Death is no Ill, but shamefully to die.

Courage, then, ought to be opposed to Death, and Caution to the Fear of Death: whereas we, on the contrary, oppose to Death, Flight; and to our Principle concerning it, Carelessines, and Desperateness, and Indisference.

§ 3. Socrates used, very properly, to call these Things Vizards: for, as Masks appear shocking and formidable to Children, from their Inexperience; we are affected in like manner, with regard to Things, for no other Reason, than as Children

112 The Discourses of Book IL

Children are, with regard to Vizards. For what is a Child? Ignorance. What is a Child? Want of Learning: for, so far as the Knowlege of Children extends, they are not inserior to us. What is Death? A Vizard. Turn it, and be convinced. See, it doth not bite. This little Body and Spirit must be separated (as they formerly were) either now, or hereaster: why, then, are you displeased if it be now? For if not now, it will be hereaster. Why? To complete the Revolution of the World: for that hath need of some Things present, others to come, and others already completed. What is Pain? A Vizard. Turn it, and be convinced.

This paultry Flesh is fometimes affected by harsh, fometimes by fmooth Impressions. If suffering be not worth your while, the Door is open; if it be, bear it: for it was fit the Door should be open, against all Accidents. And thus we have no Trouble.

§. 4. 'What, then, is the Fruit of these Principles? What it ought to be; the most noble, and the most becoming, the Truly Educated (b), Tranquillity, Security, Freedom.

⁽b) Dathus, in Greek, means nearly the fame Thing, as what we now call liberal Education. It was that Sort of Education peculiar to Gentlemen; that is, fuch as were free; and of which the Slaves, or lower Sort of People, were forbid to partake, according to the Systems of some Legislators. Such (as well as I can remember) was the Case among the Leccelemonians, and amongst the ancient Persians, till the Time of Cyrus.

It mull be observed, that the Words Educated, Free, King, and many others, were taken by the Stoics from common Life; and by them applied folely to the Character of their wife, and perfect Man.

The Translator is obliged for this Note, as well as for many other valuable Hints, to Mr. ILRREIS; so well known for many Works of Licenture and Genius.

For in this Case, we are not to give Credit to the Many, who say, that none ought to be educated but the Free; but rather to the Philosophers, who say, that the Well-educated alone are free.

How fo?

Thus: Is Freedom any thing else, than the Power of Living as we like?

Nothing elfe.

Well: tell me then, do you like to live in Error?

We do not. No one, fure, that lives in Error, (c) is free.

Do you like to live in Fear? Do you like to live in Sorrow? Do you like to live in Perturbation?

By no means.

No one, therefore, in a State of Fear, or Sorrow, or Perturbation, is free: but whoever is delivered from Sorrow, Fear, and Perturbation, by the fame means is delivered likewife from Slavery. How shall we believe you, then, good Legislators, when you say; "We allow none to be educated, "but the Free?" For the Philosophers say; "We allow "none to be free, but the Liberally-educated:" that is, God doth not allow it.

What, then, when any Person hath turned his Slave (d) about before the Conful, hath he done nothing?

(c) And ye fkall know the Truth, and the Truth fkall make you free. John viii. 32. This is one, among many other Paffages to the same Purpose, in that perfect Law of Liberty, the New Testament.

⁽i) When a Slave was to be preferred with his Freedom, he was brought before the Conful; and his Mafter, taking him by the Hand, pronounced a certain Form of Words, and then turned the Slave about, who was thus rendered free. The Fine which the Mafter was to pay on this Occasion, was applied to the public Use. Urron.

Yes, he hath.

What?

He hath turned his Slave about, before the Conful.

Nothing more?

Yes. He pays a (d) Fine for him.

Well then: is not the Man, who hath gone through this Ceremony, rendered free?

No more than [he is rendered] exempt from Perturbation. Pray, have you, who are able to give this Freedom to others, no Mafter of your own? Are not you a Slave to Money? To a Girl? To a Boy? To a Tyrant? To fome Friend of a Tyrant? Elfe, why do you tremble when any of these is in question? Therefore I so often repeat to you, Let this be your Study; have this always at hand; in what it is necessary to be couragious, and in what cautious: couragious, in what doth not depend on Choice; cautious, in what doth.

§. 5. (e) But have not I read my Papers to you? Do not you know what I am doing?

In what?

In my Essays.

Show me in what State you are, as to Defire and Averfion. Whether you do not fail of what you wifh, and incurr what you would avoid: but, as to these common-place Essays, if you are wise, you will take them, and obliterate them.

Why, did not Socrates write?

⁽d) See Note (d) in the preceding Page.

⁽c) This feems to be spoken by one of the Scholars.

Yes: who (ff) fo much? But how? As he had not always one at hand, to argue againft his Principles, or be argued againft in his Turn, he argued with, and examined, himfelf; and always treated, at leaft, fome one natural Notion, in a manner fitted for the Use of Life. These are the Things which a Philosopher writes: but for such (g) common-place Essays as those I am speaking of, he leaves to the Insensible, or to the happy Creatures whom Idlenes (b) furnishes with Leisure; or to such as are too weak to regard Consequences. And will you, when you are gone from hence (i), which the Time now calls for, be fond of showing, and reading, and be ridiculously conceited, of these Things?

off) No other ancient Author mentions Sacrates, as having written any thing, except a Hymn to Apollo, and a Translation of some Fables of Bip in Verse. Many Authors of Credit affirm, that he wrote nothing. Therefore Wolfus doubts, whether some other Name should not be put there, instead of Sacrates. Yet the Description most properly belongs to him. And, perhaps, Epistetus doth not mean to intimate here, that Sacrates had published any thing: but that he wrote, when he had no Opportunity of discoursing, for his own Improvement. But still, living constantly at Athens, the Seat of philosophical Disputation, he cannot be supposed, often to have head that Reason for Writing.

⁽g) The Original here feems corrupt, or inaccurate. I hope the Translation is not far from the true Sense.

⁽b) The Greek is Αταραξία, Tranquillity: but it feems to be a falfe Reading for Ατραξία. Αταραξία is the very Thing which Ερίστειι had been recommending through the whole Chapter, and which makes the Subject of the next; and, therefore, cannot be well fupposed to be the true Reading in a Place, where it is mentioned with Contempt.

⁽i) For επελθων, perhaps, the Reading fhould be απελθων; and it is fo translated. The Perfon to whom Epičletus speaks, was a young Man just leaving the philosophical School.

116 The DISCOURSES of Book II.

Pray fee, how I compose Dialogues.

Talk not of that, Man; but rather be able to fay; See, how I avoid being disappointed of my Desire: see, how I fecure myfelf against incurring my Aversion. Set Death before me; fet Pain, fet a Prison, fet Ignominy, fet Condemnation before me; and you will know me. This is the [proper] Oftentation of a young Man come out from the Schools. Leave the reft to others. Let no one ever hear you utter a Word about them; nor fuffer it, if any one commends you for them: but think that you are nobody, and that you know nothing. Appear to know only this, how you may never be disappointed of your Desire; never incurr your Aversion. Let others study Causes, Problems, and Syllogifins. Do you study Death, Chains, Torture, Exile (k): and all these, with Courage, and Reliance upon Him who hath called you to them, and judged you worthy a Post, in which you may show, what the rational governing Faculty can do, when fet in Array, against Powers independent on the Choice. And thus, this Paradox becomes neither impossible, nor a Paradox, that we must be at once cautious and couragious: couragious, in what doth not depend upon Choice; and cautious, in what doth.

^(¿) Some Engliß Readers, too happy to comprehend how Chains, Torture, Exile, and fidden Executions, can be ranked among the common Accidents of Life, may be furprifed to find Epitletus fo frequently endeavouring to prepare his Hearers for them. But it must be recollected, that he addressed himself to Persons, who lived under the Roman Emperors; from whose Tyranny, the very best of Men were perpetually liable to fuch Kind of Dangers.

CHAPTER II.

Of Tranquillity.

§. I. ONSIDER, you who are going to take your I Tryal, what you wish to preserve, and in what to fucceed. For if you wish to preserve a Choice conformable to Nature, you are intirely fafe: every thing goes well; you have no Trouble on your Hands. While you wish to preferve what is in your own Power, and which is naturally free, and are contented with that, whom have you longer to care for? For who is the Mafter of Things like these? Who can take them away? If you wish to be a Man of Honour and Fidelity, who shall prevent you? If you wish not to be reftrained, or compelled, who shall compel you to Defires, contrary to your Principles; to Aversions, contrary to your Opinion? The Judge, perhaps, will pass a Sentence against you, which he thinks formidable: but how can he likewise make you receive it with Aversion? Since, then, Defire and Aversion are in your own Power, what have you else to care for? Let this be your Introduction; this your Narration; this your Proof; this your Victory; this your Conclusion; and this your Applause. Thus Socrates, to one who put him in mind to prepare himself for his Tryal; " Do not you think, fays he, that I have been preparing " myfelf for this very Thing my whole Life?"----By what kind of Preparation?---" I have preferved what was in my " own Power."----What do you mean?---" I have done " nothing unjust, either in public, or in private Life."

118 The Discourses of Book II.

§. 2. But if you wish to preserve Externals too; your paultry Body, your Estate, or Dignity; I advise you immediately to prepare yourself by every possible Preparation; and besides, consider the Disposition of your Judge, and of your Adversary. If it be necessary to fall down at his Feet; fall down at his Feet: if to weep; weep: if to groan; groan. For when you have subjected what is in your own Power, to Externals, submit to Slavery at once, and do not struggle; and at one time, be willing to be a Slave, and at another, not willing: but simply, and with your whole Intention, be one or the other; free, or a Slave; well-educated, or not; a Game Cock, or a Craven: either bear to be beat till you die, or give out at once; and do not be soundly beat first, and then give out at last. If both these be shameful, make the Distinction immediately.

§. 3. Where is the Nature of Good and Evil?

Where Truth likewise is. Where Truth and where Nature are (a), there is Caution: where Truth and where Nature are not, there is Courage. Why, do you think, that is Socrates had wished to preserve Externals, that he would have said, when he appeared at his Tryal, "Anytus and "Melitus may indeed kill; but hurt me they cannot?" Was he so fo foolish, as not to see that this Way doth not lead to that End, but the contrary? What, then, is the Reason, that he not only difregards, but provokes his Judges? Thus my Friend Heraclitus, in a triffing Suit, about a little Estate at Rhodes, after having proved to the Judges that his Caufe was good, when he came to the Conclusion of his Speech; " I " will not intreat you, fays he; nor care what Judgment " you give: for it is rather you who are to be judged, than I." And thus he loft his Suit. What need was there of this? Be content not to intreat: do not tell them too, that you will not intreat; unless it be a proper Time to provoke the Judges defignedly; as in the Cafe of Socrates. But if you too are preparing fuch a Speech, what do you wait for? Why do you fubmit to be tried? For if you wish to be hanged, have Patience, and the Gibbet will come. But if you chuse rather to submit, and make your Defence as well as you can, all the rest is to be ordered accordingly; with a due Regard, however, to the Prefervation of your own Character.

⁽a) This Paffage is perplexed in the Greek, and the Translation concerned. The Meaning feems to be, that where our moral Conduct is concerned. Caution is neceffary; and Courage is neceffary in Things not dependent on our own Choice; and with which, according to the Stoic Principle, Truth and Nature have nothing to do.

§. 4. For this Reason it is ridiculous too to say, "Suggest" to me what is to be done." How should I know what to suggest to you? [You should rather say] inform my Understanding to accommodate itself to whatever may be the Event. The former is just as if an illiterate Person should say, "Tell" me what to write, when any Name is proposed to me; and I direct him to write Dion; and then another comes, and proposes to him the Name not of Dion, but of Theon; what will be the Consequence? What will he write? Whereas, if you had made Writing your Study, you would be ready prepared for whatever Word might occur: if not, how can I suggest to you? For, if the Circumstances of the Affair should suggest something else, what will you say, or how will you ast? Remember, then, the general Rule, and you will need no Suggestion: but if you gape after Externals, you must necessarily be tos'd up and down, according to the Inclination of your Master.

And who is my Mafter?

He in whose Power, is placed whatever you strive to acquire, or would avoid.

CHAPTER III.

Concerning fuch as recommend Persons to the Philosophers.

- §. 1. DIOGENES rightly answered one, who desired Letters of Recommendation from him, "At sirst "Sight he will know you to be a Man: and whether you are "a good or a bad Man, if he hath any Skill in distinguishing, he will know likewise: and, if he hath not, he will "never know it, though I should write a thousand times (a)." Just as if you were a Piece of Coin, and should desire to be recommended to any Person as good, in order to be tried: if it be to an Assayer, he will know your Value; for you will recommend yourself.
- §. 2. We ought, therefore, in Life also, to have something analogous to this Skill in Gold; that one may be able to fay, like the Affayer, Bring me whatever Piece you will, and I will find out its Value: or, as I would fay with regard to Syllogifins, Bring me whomever you will, and I will diftinguish for you, whether he knows how to folve Syllogifins, or not. Why? Because I can folve Syllogifins mylelf, and have that Faculty, which is necessary for one who knows how to find out Persons skilled in the Solution of Syllogifins. But how do I act in Life? I at sometimes call a Thing good; at others, bad. What is the Cause of this? The contrary to what happens in Syllogisfins; Ignorance, and Inexperience.

⁽a) This is one of the many extravagant Refinements of the Philofophers; and might lead Perfons into very dangerous Miftakes, if it was staid down as a Maxim, in ordinary Life.

CHAPTER IV.

Concerning a Person, who had been guilty of Adultery.

§. 1. A 8 he was faying, that Man is made for Fidelity; and that whoever fubverts this, fubverts the peculiar Property of Man; one of those who pass for Men of Literature happened to come in, who had been found guilty of Adultery, in that City. But, continues EpicTetus, if, laying afide that Fidelity for which we were born, we form Defigns against the Wife of our Neighbour, what do we do? What elfe but deftroy and ruin----What? Fidelity, Honour, and Sanctity of Manners .--- Only these? And do not we ruin Neighbourhood? Friendship? Our Country? In what Rank do we place ourselves? How am I to consider you, Sir? As a Neighbour? A Friend? What Sort of one? As a Citizen? How shall I trust you? Indeed, if you were fome forry Veffel, fo noifome that no Use could be made of you; you might be thrown on a Dunghill, and no Mortal R would would take the Trouble to pick you up: but if, being a Man, you cannot fill any one Place in human Society, what shall we do with you? For, suppose you cannot hold the Place of a Friend, can you hold even that of a Slave? And who will trust you? Why, then, should not you also be contented to be thrown upon some Dunghill, as a useless Vessel, and indeed as mere Dung? Will you say, after this, Hath no one any Regard for me, a Man of Letters? Why, you are wicked, and fit for no Use. Just as if Wasps should take it ill that no one hath any Regard for them; but all shun, and whoever can, beats them down. You have such a Sting, that whoever you strike with it, is thrown into Troubles and Pangs. What would you have us do with you? There is no-where to place you.

§. 2. What, then, are not Women, by Nature, common? I admit it: and so is a Pig at Table common to those who are invited. But, after it is distributed, go, if you think proper, and snatch away the Share of him who fits next you; or slily steal it, or stretch out your Hand, and taste; and, if you cannot tear away any of the Meat, dip your Fingers, and lick them. A fine Companion! A Socratic Guest indeed! Again: Is not the Theatre common to all the Citizens? Therefore come, when all are seated, if you think proper, and turn any one of them out of his Place. Thus Women are common by Nature: but when the Legislator, like the Master of an Entertainment, distributes them, will not you, like the rest of the Company, be contented with desiring a Share for yourself; but must you pilser, and taste what belongs to another?

But I am a Man of Letters, and understand Archedemus (a).

With all your Understanding of Archedemus, then, be an Adulterer, and a Rogue: and, instead of a Man, a Wolf, or an Ape. For where is the Difference?

CHAPTER V.

How Magnanimity may be confiftent with Care.

§. 1. THE Materials of Action are indifferent: but the U/e of them is not indifferent.

How, then, shall one preserve Intrepidity and Tranquillity; and at the same time be careful, and neither rash, nor indolent?

By imitating those who play at Tables. The Dice are indifferent; the Pieces are indifferent. How do I know what will fall out? But it is my Business, to manage carefully and dextroufly whatever doth fall out. Thus in Life too, this is the chief Business: diffinguish, and separate Things; and say, "Externals are not in my Power; Choice is. Where "shall I feek Good and Evil? Within; in what is my com." But, in what belongs to others, call nothing Good, or Evil, or Profit, or Hurt, or any thing of that Sort.

§. 2. What then, are we to treat these, in a careless Way? By no means: for this, on the other hand, is an evil Exercise of the Faculty of Choice; and, on that (b) account, against Nature. But we are to act with Care, because the U/e of the Materials [of Action] is not indifferent; and at the fame time with Intrepidity and Tranquillity, because the Materials themselves are indifferent. For where a Thing is not indifferent, there no one can reftrain or compell me. Where I am capable of being reftrained, or compelled, the Acquifition doth not depend upon me; nor is either good or evil. The Use of it, indeed, is either good or evil; but that doth depend upon me. It is difficult, I own, to blend and unite [in one Character] the Carefulness of one who is affected by the Materials of Action, and the Intrepidity of one who difregards them; but it is not impossible: if it be, it is impossible to be happy. How do we act in a Voyage? What is in my Power? To chuse the Pilot, the Sailors, the Day, the Time of Day. Afterwards comes a Storm. What have I to care for? My Part is performed. The Subject belongs to another, to the Pilot. But the Ship is finking: What then have I to do? That which alone I can do; I am drowned, without Fear, without Clamour, or accufing God; but as one who knows, that what is born, must likewife die. For I am not Eternity, but a Man; a Part of the Whole, as an Hour is of the Day. I must come like an Hour, and like an Hour must pass away. What signifies it whether by Drowning, or by a Fever? For, in some Way or other, pass I must.

⁽a) A Stoic Philosopher, of Tarfus, in Cilicia. UPTON.

⁽b) The Translation follows Mr. Upton's Conjecture.

§. 3. This you may see to be the Practice of those, who play skilfully at Ball. No one contends for the Ball [itself], as either a Good or an Evil; but how he may throw, and catch it again. Here lies the Address, here the Art, the Nimblenes, the Sagacity; that I may not be able to catch it, even if I hold up my Lap for it; another may catch it, whenever I throw it. But if we catch or throw it, with Fear or Perturbation, what Kind of Play will this be? How shall we keep ourselves steady; or how see the Order of the Game? One will say, Throw: another, Do not throw: a Third, You have thrown once already. This is a mere Quarrel; not a Play. Therefore Socrates well understood playing at Ball.

What do you mean?

Using Pleasantry at his Tryal. "Tell me, says he, Anywits, how can you say, that I do not believe a God? "What do you think Demons are? (c) Are they not either the Offspring of the Gods, or compounded of Gods and "Men?"——"Yes."——Do you think, then, that one can believe there are Mules, and not believe, that there are "Asse?" This was just as if he had been playing at Ball. And what was the Ball he had to play with? Life, Chains, Exile, a Draught of Poison, Separation from a Wife, and the Desertion of Orphan Children. These were what he had to y with; and yet, nevertheless, he did play, and threw he Ball with Address. Thus we should be careful how we ay; but indifferent, as to the Ball itself. We are by all teans to manage external Materials with Art; not taking nem for ourselves; but showing our Art about them, whatver they may happen to be. Thus a Weaver doth not make he Wool; but employs his Art upon what is given him. It is another who gives you Food, and a Property: and may take them away, and your paultry Body too. Do you, however, work upon the Materials you have received; and then, if you come off unhurt, others, no doubt, who meet you, will congratulate you on your Escape. But he who hath a clearer nfight into fuch Things, if he fees [indeed] you have behaved in a becoming Manner, will praise and congratulate you: but, if you owe your Escape to any unbecoming Action, the contrary. For where there is a reasonable Cause of Rejoicing, there is likewise [a reasonable Cause] of Congratulation.

⁽c) Scerates professed himself to have a good Demon; and argues here jocularly from thence, that he must believe the Existence of a Deity: as he who believes there are Mules, must believe three are Affes; because that Species enters into the Composition of the other. But there is a Play upon the Words in the Original, which cannot be preserved in the Translation. One cannot, I think, help regretting, that Plate should relate, and Epsideus approve, a Witticism unworthy of the Astric Genius; and an Instance of Levity, on so avail a Subject, unbecoming the Character of the wise and pious Sacrates. It may, however, be some Excuse, that he thought neither his Accuser, nor his Judges deserved, or were likely to be influenced by, a more ferious Answer.

§. 4. How, then, are some external Things faid to be according to Nature; others contrary to it?

When we are confidered as unconnected Individuals. I will allow it is natural for the Foot, [for Inftance,] to be clean. But if you take it as a Foot, and not as an unconnected individual Thing, it will be fit that it should walk in the Dirt, and tread upon Thorns; and fometimes that it should even be cut off, for the Good of the Whole: otherwife it is no longer a Foot. We should reason in some such manner concerning ourselves. What are you? A Man. If then, indeed, you confider yourfelf, as an unconnected Individual.

vidual, it is natural that you should live to old Age; be rich, and healthy: but if you consider yourself as a Man, and as a Part of the Whole, it will be fit, on the Account of that Whole, that you should at one time be fick; at another, take a Voyage, and be exposed to Danger: sometimes be in Want; and possibly it may happen, die before your Time. Why, then, are you displeased? Do not you know, that else, as the other is no longer a Foot, so you are no longer a Man? For what is a Man? A Part of a Commonwealth; principally of that which consists of Gods and Men; and next, of that to which you immediately belong, which is a Miniature of the universal City.

§. 5. What then, must I, at one Time, be called to a Tryal; must another, at another Time, be scorched by a Fever; another be exposed to the Sea; another die; and another be condemned?

Yes: for it is impossible, in such a Body, in such a World, and among such Companions, but that some or other of us must sall into such Circumstances. (d) Your Business, when you come into them, is, to say what you ought, to order Things as you can. Then, says one, "I decide that you "have acted unjustly." Much Good may it do you; I have done ny Part. You are to look to it, whether you have done yours: for there is some Danger of that too, let me tell you.

⁽d) See p. 3. Note c.

CHAPTER VI.

Of Indifference.

Hypothetical Proposition is an indifferent Thing; but the Judgment concerning it, is not indifferent: but is either Knowlege, or Opinion, or Mistake. Thus Life is indifferent; the U/e of it not indifferent. When you are told, therefore, that these Things are indifferent, do not, upon that account, ever be careless; nor, when you are excited to Carefulness, be abject, and struck by the Admiration of the Materials of Action. It is good to know your own Qualifications and Powers; that, where you are not qualified, you may be quiet, and not angry that others have the Advantage of you, in fuch Things. For you too, [in your Turn,] will think it reasonable, that you should have the Advantage in the Art of Syllogisms; and, if others should be angry at it, you will tell them, by way of Confolation, "I have learn'd it, and you have not." Thus too, where-ever Practice is necessary, do not pretend to what can be attained no other Way; but leave the Matter to those who are practifed in it, and do you be contented with a composed Firmness of Mind. "Go, for Instance, and pay " your Compliments to fuch a Person." "How?" "Not " meanly." --- " But I have been shut out; for I have not " learn'd to get in at the Window: and, finding the Door " flut, I must necessarily either go back, or get in at the "Window." "But fpeak to him too." "I will fpeak " to him." "In what manner?" "Not meanly." But you have not fucceded; for this was not your Bufiness, but bis.

bis. Why do you claim what belongs to another? Always remember what is your own, and what is another's; and you will never be diffurbed.

§, 2. Hence Chryfippus rightly fays; While Confequences are uncertain, I will keep to those Things which are best adapted to the Attainment of what is conformable to Nature: for God himself hath formed me to chuse this. If I knew, that it was now deftined for me to be fick, I would even exert my Pursuits towards it: for even the Foot, if it had Understanding, would exert itself to get into the Dirt. For why are Ears of Corn produced, if it be not to ripen? and why do they ripen, if not to be reaped? For they are not separate Individuals. If they were capable of Sense, do you think they would wish never to be reaped? It would be a Curse upon Ears of Corn, not to be reaped: and we ought to know, that it would be a Curse upon Man, not to die; like that of not ripening, and not being reaped. Since, then, it is necessary for us to be reaped, and we have, at the same time, Understanding to know it, are we angry at it? This is only because we neither know what we are, nor have studied what belongs to Man, as Jockies do, what belongs to Yet Chrylantas, when he was about to strike an Enemy, on hearing the Trumpet found a Retreat, drew back his Hand: for he thought it more eligible to obey the Command of his General, than his own Inclination (a). But not one of us, even when Necessity calls, is ready and willing to obey it: but we suffer, whatever Things we do suffer, weeping and groaning, and calling them our Circumstances (b). What Circumstances, Man? For if you call what surrounds you, Circumstances, every thing is a Circumstance: but, if you apply this Name to Hardships, where is the Hardship, that whatever is born must die. The Instrument is either a Sword, or a Wheel, or the Sea, or a Tile, or a Tyrant. And what doth it signify to you, by what Way you descend to Hades? All are equal: but, if you would hear the Truth, the shortest is that by which a Tyrant sends you. No Tyrant was ever six Months, in cutting any Man's Throat: but a Fever is often a Year [in killing.] All these Things are mere Sound, and the Pomp of empty Names.

⁽a) In a Speech which Cyrus made to his Soldiers, after the Battle with the Affyrians, he mentions Chryfantas, one of his Captains, with particular Honour, for this Inftance of his Obedience. Xenopu. L. iv.

My Life is in Danger from Cæfar.

And am not I in Danger, who dwell at Nicopolis, where there are so many Earthquakes? And when you yourself cross the Adriatic (c), what is then in Danger? Is not your Life?

Ay: but I am in Danger, with respect to Opinion.

What, your own? How so? Can any one compel you to have any Opinion, contrary to your own Inclination?

But the Opinions of others too.

⁽b) Hepigramus, in Greek, hath a double Meaning, which cannot be preferved in a Translation. It fignifies both in general, Circumftances, and in particular, hard Circumftances, or Difficulties.

⁽c) Epičletus probably means, in the Way Home, from Nicopolis to Rome; whence this Person had come to hear him.

And what Danger is it of yours, if others have false Opinions?

But I am in Danger of being banished.

What is it to be banished? To be some-where else than at Rome.

Yes: but what if I should be sent to Gyaros?

If it be worth your while, you will go: if not, you have another Place to go to; where he, who now fends you to Gyaros, must go likewise, whether he will or not (d). Why, then, do you come to these, as to great Tryals? They are not equal to your Qualifications. So that an ingenuous young Man would say, It was not worth while for this, to have read, and writ, so much, and to have sat so long, listening to a good-for-nothing old Fellow. Only remember, that Division, by which your own, and not your own, is distinguished, and you will never claim what belongs to others. A Tribunal, and a Prison, is, each of them, a Place; one high, the other low: but Choice is equal: and if you have a mind to keep it equal for both Places, it may be kept. We shall then become Imitators of Socrates, when, even in a Prison, we are able to write Hymns (e) of Praise:

⁽d) How gloomy, how empty the Stoic Confolation! How differently would the Christian answer. "Well, and can he banish you from the "Presence of your true Sovereign, your indulgent Father, your best

[&]quot;Friend? And what, then, is Graros worse than Rome? You, behaving well in Adversity, are the Object of Almighty Protection and future "Reward: he, amidt his Tyranny, accountable to an offended Judge."

⁽e) Socrates writ a Hymn to Apollo, when he was in Prifon; of which Diogenes Laertius recites the first Line. See the Behaviour of Paul and but, as we now are, confider, whether we could bear, that even another should fay to us in a Prison, "Shall I read you "a Hymn of Praise?"—"Why do you trouble me: do you "know in what a sad Situation I am?" In such Circum-

"know in what a lad Situation I am?" In luch Circumflances, am I able to hear Hymns?"——" What Circumflances?"——" I am going to die."——" And are all other

" Men to be immortal?"

CHAPTER VII.

Of Divination.

§. 1. FROM an unfeafonable Regard to Divination, we omit many Duties (a). For what can the Diviner fee, befides Death, or Danger, or Sicknefs, or, in fhort, Things of this Kind? When it is neceffary, then, to expofe one's felf to Danger for a Friend, or even a Duty to die for him, what Occafion have I for Divination? Have not I a Diviner within, who hath told me the Effence of Good and Evil; and who explains to me the Indications of both? What further Need, then, have I of the Entrails [of Victims], or [the Flight] of Birds? Can I bear with the other Diviner, when he fays, "This is for your Interest?" For doth he know what is for my Interest? Doth he know what Good is? Hath he learn'd the Indications of Good and Evil, as he hath those of the Victims? If so, he knows the Indications likewise of Fair and Base, Just and Unjust. Do you tell me, Sir, what is indicated to me; Life or Death; Riches or Poverty. But whether these Things are for my Interest, or not, I shall not inquire of you. "Why?" Because you do not give your Opinion about Grammar. [or any established Point of Knowlege]; and do you give it here, in Things about which we all take different Ways, and dispute with one another? Therefore the Lady, who was going to fend a Month's Provision to Gratilla (b), in her Banishment, made a right Answer to one, who told her Domitian would seize it. I had rather, says she, that he should seize it, than I not send it.

⁽a) The Stoics were Advocates for Divination; though they condemned, what they deemed, the Abufes of it. The 32d Chapter of the Embiridion is on the fame Subject.

§. 2. What, then, is it that leads us fo often to Divination? Cowardice; the Dread of Events. Hence we flatter the Diviners. "Pray, Sir, shall I inherit my Father's "Estate?"——"Let us see: let us sacrifice upon the Occa" fion."——"Nay, Sir, just as Fortune pleases." Then, if he says, "You shall inherit it," we give him Thanks, as if we received the Inheritance from bim. The Consequence of this is, that they play upon us.

§. 3. What, then, is to be done?

We should come without previous Desire or Aversion. As a Traveller inquires the Road of the Person he meets, without any Desire for that which turns to the right Hand, more than to the Left: for he wishes for neither of these, but that only which leads him properly. Thus we should come to God, as to a Guide. Juft as we make ufe of our Eyes: not perfuading them to fhow us one Object rather than another; but receiving fuch as they present to us. But now we hold the Bird with Fear and Trembling: and, in our Invocations to God, intreat Him; "Lord have Mercy "upon me: suffer me to come off safe." You Wretchl would you have any thing then, but what is best? And what is best, but what pleases God? Why do you, as far as in you lies, corrupt your Judge, and seduce your Adviser?

⁽b) A Lady of high Rank at Rome, banished from Italy, among many other noble Persons, by Domitian.

CHAPTER VIII.

Wherein confists the Essence of Good.

§. I. OD is beneficial. Good is also beneficial. It should feem, then, that where the Effence of God is, there too is the Effence of Good. What then is the Effence of God? Flesh?——By no means. An Estate?——Fame?—By no means. Intelligence? Knowlege? Right Reason?——Certainly. Here then, without more ado, seek the Effence of Good. For, do you seek it in a Plant?——No.——Or in a Brute?——No.——If then you seek it only in a rational Subject, why do you seek it any where but in what is distinct from Irrationals? Plants have not the Use of the Appearances of Things; and therefore you do not apply the Term Good to them.——Good, then, requires the Use of these Appearances. And nothing else? If so, you may say, that Good, and Happiness, and Unhappiness, belong to mere Animals. But this you do not say; and you are right: for, how much soever they have the Use of the Appearances of Things, they have not the Faculty of understanding that Use; and with good Reason: for they are made to be sub-servient to others, and not Principals themselves. Why was an As made? Was it as a Principal? No: but because we had need of a Back able to carry Burthens. We had need too that he should walk; therefore he had the Use of the Appearances of Things added; otherwise he could not have walked. But here his Endowments end: for, if an Understanding of that Use had been likewise added, he would not, in Reason, have been subject to us, nor have done us these Services; but would have been like, and equal to ourselves. Why will you not, therefore, seek the Essence of Good in that, without which, you will not say, there can be Good in any thing?

§. 2. What then? Are not these likewise the Works of the Gods? They are: but not Principals, nor Parts of the Gods. But you are a Principal. You are a distinct Portion of the Essence of God; and contain a certain Part of him in yourself (a). Why then are you ignorant of your noble Birth? Why do not you consider, whence you came?

⁽a) See Introduction, §. 19.

See 1 Cor. vi. 10. 2 Cor. vi. 16. 2 Tim. i. 14. 1 John iii. 24. iv. 12. 13. But though the fingle Expression of Carrying God about with us, may seem to have some nearly parallel to it in the New Testament, yet those represent the Almighty in a more venerable Manner; as taking the Hearts of good Men for a Temple to dwell in. But the other Expressions here of Feeting and Exercising God, and the Whole of the Paragraph, and indeed of the Stoic System, there the real Sense of even its more decent Phrasses to be vastly different from that of Scripture.

Why do not you remember, when you are eating, who you are who eat; and whom you feed? When you are in the Company of Women; when you are conversing; when you are exercising; when you are disputing; do not you know, that it is a God you feed; a God you exercise? You carry a God about with you, Wretch, and know nothing of it. Do you suppose I mean some God without you, of Gold or Silver? It is within yourself you carry him; and profane him, without being sensible of it, by impure Thoughts, and unclean Actions. If even the Image of God were present, you would not dare to act as you do: and when God himself is within you, and hears and sees all, are not you assume to think and act thus; insensible of your own Nature, and hateful to God?

§. 3. After all, why are we afraid, when we fend a young Man from the School, into Action, that he should behave indecently, eat indecently, converse indecently with Women: that he should either debase himself by a shabby Dress, or clothe himself too finely? Doth not he know the God within him? Doth not he know with whom he sets out. Have we Patience to hear him say, "I wish to have you with me."

Have you not God? Do you feek any other, while you have bim? Or will He tell you any other than these things? If you were a Statue of Phidias, either Jupiter or Minerva, you would remember both yourself and the Artist; and, if you had any Sense, you would endeavour to do nothing unworthy of him who formed you, or of yourself: nor to appear in an unbecoming Manner, to Spectators. And are you now careless how you appear, because you are the Workmanship of Jupiter? And yet, what Comparison is there, either between the Artists, or the Things they have formed? What Work of any [human] Artist contains in itself, those Faculties which are shown, in forming it? Is it any thing but Marble, or Brafs, or Gold, or Ivory? And the Minerva of Phidias, when its Hand is once extended, and a Victory placed in it, remains in that Attitude, for ever, Works of God are indued with Motion, Breath, the Use of the Appearances of Things, Judgment. Being, then, the Formation of fuch an Artift, will you dishonour him; especially, when he hath not only formed, but intrusted, and given the Guardianship of you, to yourself? Will you not only be forgetful of this, but, moreover, dishonour the Trust? If God had committed some Orphan to your Charge, would you have been thus careless of him? He hath delivered yourfelf to your Care; and fays, " I had no one fitter to be trusted than you: preserve this Person for 46 Me, fuch as he is by Nature; modest, faithful, sublime, " unterrified, dispassionate, tranquil:" And will you not preferve him?

manfhip

§. 4. But it will be faid; "Whence this supercilious Look, " and Gravity of Face?" [in our young Philosopher]----" I have not yet so much Gravity, as the Case deserves. I " do not yet trust to what I have learned, and assented to. " I still fear my own Weakness. Let me but take Courage " a little, and then you shall see such a Look, and such an " Appearance, as I ought to have. Then I will show you " the Statue, when it is finished, when it is polished. Do " you think I will show you a supercilious Countenance? " Heaven

" Heaven forbid! For Olympian Jupiter doth not lift up

" his Brow; but keeps a fleady Countenance, as becomes him who is about to fay,

---- Th' immutable Decree

No Force can shake: what is, that ought to be.

POPE.

"Such will I show myself to you: faithful, modest, noble, "tranquil."----" What, and immortal too, and exempt "from Age and Sickness?" No. But sickness and dying as becomes a God. This is in my Power; this Lean do. The other is not in my Power, nor can I do it. Shall I show you the [b] Nerves of a Philosopher?

" What Nerves are those?"

A Defire undifappointed; an Aversion unincurred; Pursuits duly exerted; a careful Resolution; an unerring Affent. These you shall see,

CHAPTER IX.

That when we are unable to fulfil what the Character of a Man promises, we assume that of a Philosopher.

§. 1. T is no common Attainment, merely to fulfil what the Nature of Man promifes. For what is Man? A rational and mortal Being.

Well: from what are we diffinguished by Reason?.

From

⁽b) An Allusion to the Combatants in the public Exercises, who used to show their Shoulders, Museles, and Nerves, as a Proof of their Strength. See B. I. c. 4. §.4. B. II. c. 18. §.5. B. III. c. 22. §.5.

From wild Beafts. From what else?

From Sheep, and the like.

Take care, then, to do nothing like a wild Beaft; otherwife, you have destroy'd the Man; you have not fulfilled what your Nature promises. Take care too, to do nothing like Cattle: for thus likewise the Man is destroy'd.

In what do we act like Cattle?

When we act gluttonoufly, lewdly, rafhly, fordidly, inconfiderately, into what are we funk?

Into Cattle.

What have we destroy'd?

The rational Being.

When we behave contentiously, injuriously, passionately, and violently, into what are we funk?

Into wild Beafts.

§. 2. And farther; fome of us are wild Beafts of a larger Size: others, little mischievous Vermin; whence there is room to say, Let me rather be eat by a Lion. By all these Means, is destroy'd what the Nature of Man promises. For, when is a conjunctive Proposition preserv'd?

When it fulfils what its Nature promifes.

So that the Prefervation of fuch a Propolition confifts in this; that its feveral Parts are a Conjunction of Truths.

When is a disjunctive Proposition preserved?

When it fulfils what its Nature promifes.

When is a Flute, a Harp, a Horfe, or a Dog, preserv'd? When each fulfils what its Nature promises.

The DISCOURSES of Book II.

140

Where is the Wonder then, that Man should be preserved, and destroyed, in the same Manner? All are preserved and improved by Operations correspondent [to their several Faculties]; as a Carpenter, by Building; a Grammarian, by Grammar: but if he accustom himself to write ungrammatically, his Art will necessarily be spoiled and destroyed. Thus modest Actions preserve the modest Man, and immodest ones destroy him: faithful Actions, the saithful Man; and the contrary destroy him: On the other hand, contrary Actions heighten contrary Characters. Thus Impudence, an impudent one; Knavery, a knavish one; Slander, a slanderous one; Anger, an angry one; and unequitable Dealings, a covetous one.

§. 3. For this Reason, Philosophers advise us, not to be contented with mere Learning; but to add Meditation likewife, and then Practice. For we have been long accustom'd to contrary Actions, and have practifed upon wrong Opinions. If therefore, we do not likewise habituate ourselves to practife upon right Opinions, we shall be nothing more than Expositors of the Principles of others. For who among us is not already able to discourse, according to the Rules of Art, upon Good and Evil? That some Things are good, some evil, and others indifferent: the Good, Virtue, and whatever partakes of Virtue; the Evil, the contrary; and the Indifferent, Riches, Health, Reputation: and then, if, while we are faying all this, there should happen some more-than-ordinary Noise, or one of the Byflanders should laugh at us, we are disconcerted. Philosopher, what is become of what you were faying? Whence did did it proceed? Merely from your Lips? Why then, do you pollute the Aids which others have provided? Why do you trifle on the most important Subjects? It is one thing to hoard up Provision in a Store-house, and another to eat it. What is eaten is concocted, digefted, and becomes Nerves, Flesh, Bones, Blood, Colour, Breath. Whatever is hoarded up is ready indeed, whenever you have a Mind to show it; but of no further Use to you than the mere Notion, that you have it. For what Difference is there, whether you explain thele Doctrines, or those of Persons of opposite Principles? Sit down now, and comment, according to the Rules of Art, upon the Principles of Epicurus: and perhaps you may comment more practically than he could have done Why then do you call yourfelf a Stoic? Why do you act a Few, when you are a Greek? Do not you see on what Terms each is called a Yew, a Syrian, an Egyptian? And, when we fee any one wavering, we are wont to fav, This is not a Yew; but acts one. But, when he affumes the Sentiments of one who hath been baptiz'd and circumcifed (a), then he both really is, and is called, a Yow. Thus we, falfifying our Profession, are Yews in Name, but in reality fomething elfe. Our Sentiments are inconfiftent with our Discourse; far from practifing what we teach, and what we pride ourselves in the Knowlege of. Thus, while we are unable to fulfil what the Character of a Man promifes, we affume, befides, fo vaft a Weight as that of a Philosopher. As if a Person, incapable of lifting ten Pounds, should endeavour to heave the fame Stone with Ajax.

⁽a) The Translation follows Mr. Upton's Conjecture.

CHAPTER X.

How we may investigate the Duties of Life from the Names

§.1. EXAMINE who you are. In the first place, a Man; that is, one who hath nothing superior to the Faculty of Choice; but all Things subject to this; and this itself uninflaved, and unsubjected, to any thing. Confider then, from what you are diffinguished by Reason. You are diftinguished from wild Beafts: you are diftinguished from Cattle. Befides: you are a Citizen of the World, and a Part of it: not a subservient, but a principal, Part. You are capable of comprehending the divine Oeconomy; and of confidering the Connexions of Things. What then doth the Character of a Citizen promise? To hold no private Interest; to deliberate of nothing as a separate Individual, but like the Hand or the Foot; which, if they had Reason, and comprehended the Constitution of Nature, would never purfue, or defire, but with a Reference to the Whole. Hence the Philosophers rightly fay, That, if a wife and good Man could foresee what was to happen, he would help forward Sickness, and Death, and Mutilation, to himfelf; being fenfible, that these Things are appointed from the Order of the Universe; and that the Whole is superior to a Part, and the City, to the Citizen. But, fince we do not foreknow what is to happen, it becomes our Duty to adhere to what is more naturally adapted to our Option: for, amongst other Things, we were born for this.

- §. 2. Remember next, that you are a Son: and what doth this Character promife? To efteem every thing that is his, as belonging to his Father: in every Inftance to obey him: not to revile him to another: not to fay or do any thing, injurious to him: to give way and yield in every thing; co-operating with him to the utmost of his Power.
- §. 3. After this, know likewife, that you are a Brother: and that to this Character it belongs, to make Conceffions; to be eafily perfuaded; to use gentle Language: never to elaim, for yourfelf, any of the Things independent on Choice; but chearfully to give these, that you may have the larger Share of what is dependent on it. For consider what it is, instead of a Lettuce, for Instance, or a Chair, to procure for yourself a good Temper? How great an Advantage gained!
- §. 4. If, befides this, you are a Senator of any City, confider yourlelf as a Senator: if a Youth, as a Youth: if am old Man, as an old Man. For each of thefe Names, if it comes to be confidered, always points out the proper Duties. But, if you go and revile your Brother, I tell you, you have forgot who you are, and what is your Name. For even if you were a Smith, and made an ill Use of the Hammer, you would have forgot the Smith: and, if you have forgot the Brother, and are become, instead of a Brother, an Enemy, do you imagine you have made no Change of one Thing for another, in that Case? If, instead of a Man, a gentle social Creature, you are become a wild Beaft, mischievous, instidious, biting; have you lost nothing? But must you lose Money, in order to suffer Damage; and is there no other Thing, the Lofs of which endamages a Man? If you were to part with your Skill in Grammar, or in Music, would you think the Lofs of thefe a Damage? And, if you part with Honour, Decency, and Gentleness, do you think that no Matter? Yet the first are lost by some Cause external, and independent on Choice; but the laft, by our own Fault. There is no Shame either in not (a) having, or in lofing the one; but either not to have, or to lofe, the other, is equally shameful, and reproachful, and unhappy. doth the Pathic lofe? The Man. What doth the fmooth effeminate Fellow lofe? (b) Many other Things; but however the Man alfo. What doth an Adulterer lose? The modest, the chafte Character; the Neighbour. What doth an angry Person lose? Something else. A Coward? Something else. No one is wicked without fome Lofs, or Damage. Now, if, after all, you make the Loss of Money the only Damage, all these [Wretches] are unhurt and undamaged. Nav. it may be, even Gainers; as, by fuch Practices, their Money may possibly be increased. But consider: if you refer every thing to Money, the Man who loses his Nose is not hurt. Yes, fay you; he is maimed in his Body. Well: but doth he, who loses his Smell itself, lose nothing? Is there, then, no Faculty of the Soul, which he who possesses it is the better for; and he who parts with it, the worse?

What Sort do you mean?

⁽a) The true Reading of the Greek is out our exer.

⁽k) It hath been fuggefted to me, that διατιλθεις, not διατιλθεις, is the true Reading; and I have ventured to to translate it. See L. III. c. 1. 1: 352, 353. of Mr. Upton's Edition.

Have we not a natural Sense of Honour? We have.

Doth he, who loses this, fuffer no Damage? Is he deprived of nothing? Doth he part with nothing that belongs to him? Have we no natural Fidelity? No natural Affection? No natural Disposition to mutual Usefulnes, to mutual Forbearance? Is he, then, who carelessly suffers himself to be damaged in these Respects, unburt and undamaged?

§. 5. What, then, shall not I hurt him, who hath hurt me?

Confider first what Hurt is; and remember what you have heard from the Philosophers. For, if both Good and Evil confift in Choice, fee whether what you fay, doth not amount to this: "Since he hath hurt himself, by injuring me; shall " not I hurt myfelf, by injuring him?" Why do we not make fome fuch Representation to ourselves, as this? Are we hurt, when any Detriment happens to our bodily Poffeffions; and are we not at all hurt, when any happens to our Faculty of Choice? He who is deceived, or hath done an Injury, hath no Pain in his Head; nor loses an Eye, a Leg, or an Estate: and we wish for nothing beyond these. Whether we have a modeft and faithful, or a shameless and unfaithful, Will and Choice, we make not the fmallest Difference; except only in the Schools, as far as a few Words go. Therefore all the Improvement we make, reaches only to Words; and beyond them is absolutely nothing.

CHAPTER XI.

What the Beginning of Philosophy is.

§. 1. THE Beginning of Philosophy, at least to such as enter upon it in a proper Way, and by the Door, is a Consciousness of our own Weakness, and Inability, in necessary Things. For we came into the World without any natural Idea of a right-angled Triangle; of a Diefis, or a Hemitone, in Music: but we learn each of these Things by fome Instruction of Art. Hence, they who do not understand them, do not form any Conceit of understanding them. But who ever came into the World, without an innate Idea of Good and Evil; Fair and Base; Becoming and Unbecoming; Happiness and Misery; Proper and Improper; what ought to be done, and what not to be done? Hence we all make use of the Names, and endeavour to apply our Pre-conceptions to particular Cafes. "Such a one hath acted well; " not well: right; not right: is unhappy; is happy: is " just; is unjust." Who of us refrains from these Names? Who defers the Use of them, till he hath learnt it; as those do, who are ignorant of Lines and Sounds? The Reafon of this is, that we (a) come instructed, in some degree, by Nature upon these Subjects; and from this Beginning, we go on to add Self-conceit. " For why, fay you, should not I " know what Fair and Base is? Have not I the Idea of " it?" You have. " Do not I apply this Idea to Par-

⁽a) For Tiras in the Greek, the Sense seems to require huas.

"ticulars?" You do. "Do not I apply it right, then?" Here lies the whole Queftion; and here arifes the Self-conceit. For, beginning from these acknowleged Points, Men proceed to what is in Dispute, by means of their unfuitable Application. For, if they posses a right Method of Application, what would restrain them from being perfect? Now, since you think, that you make a suitable Application of your Pre-conceptions, to particular Cases, tell me whence you derive this.

From its feeming fo to me.

But it doth not feem so to another: and doth not he too form a Conceit, that he makes a right Application?

He doth.

Is it possible, then, that each of you should apply your Pre-conceptions right, on the very Subjects about which you have contradictory Opinions?

It is not.

Have you any thing to show us, then, for this Application, preferable to its feeming so to you? And doth a Madman act any otherwise than seems to him, right? Is this then, a sufficient Criterion to him too!

It is not.

Come therefore, to fomething preferable to what fiems. What is that?

§. 2. The Beginning of Philosophy is this: The being fenfible of the Disagreement of Men with each other: an Inquiry into the Cause of this Disagreement; and a Disapprobation, and Distrust of what merely fems: a certain Examination into what seems, whether it seem rightly: and an Invention of fome Rule, like a Balance, for the Determination of Weights; like a Square, for strait and crooked.

Is this the Beginning of Philosophy, that all Things, which feem right to all Persons, are so?

Why; is it possible, that Contradictions can be right? Well then, not all Things; but all that seem so to us.

And why more to you, than to the Syrians, or Egyptians? Than to me, or to any other Man?

Not at all more.

§. 3. Therefore [merely] what feems to each Man, is not fufficient to determine the Reality of a Thing. For even in Weights or Measures we are not satisfied with the bare Appearance; but for every thing we find some Rule. And is there, in the present Case then, no Rule, presented to what feems? Is it possible, that what is of the greatest Necessity in human Life, should be left incapable of Determination and Discovery?

There is, then, some Rule.

And why do we not feek, and difcover it; and, when we have difcovered, make use of it, without fail, ever after, so as not even to move a Finger, without it. For this, I conceive, is what, when found, will cure (b) those of their Madness, who make use of no other Measure, but their own perverted Way of Thinking. That afterwards, beginning from certain known and determinate Points, we may make use of Pre-conceptions, properly applied to Particulars. What is the Subject that falls under our Inquiry?

⁽b) The Sense requires, that the Reading should be απαλλασσοι αr, or απαλλαξεί.

Pleafure.

Bring it to the Rule. Throw it into the Scale. Muft Good be fomething in which it is fit to confide? and to which we may truft?

Yes.

Is it fit to truft to any thing unfleady?

No.

Is Pleafure, then, a fleady Thing?

No.

Take it, then, and throw it out of the Scale, and drive it far diffant from the Place of good Things. But, if you are not quick-fighted, and one Balance is infufficient, bring another. Is it fit to be elated by Good?

Yes.

Is it fit, then, to be elated by a prefent Pleasure? See that you do not fay it is; otherwise I shall not think you so much as worthy to use a Scale. Thus are Things judged, and weighed, when we have the Rules ready. This is the Part of Philosophy, To examine, and fix the Rules: and to make use of them, when they are known, is the Business of a wise and good Man.

CHAPTER XII.

Of Disputation.

§.1. HAT Things are to be learn'd, in order to the right Use of Reason, the Philosophers of our Seet have accurately taught: but we are altogether unpractical.

tiled in the due Application of them. Only give any of us, that you please, some illiterate Person, for an Antagonist, and he will not find out, how to treat him. But when he hath a little moved the Man, if he happens to answer beside the Purpose, he knows not how to deal with him any further; but either reviles, or laughs at him; and says, "He is an illiterate Fellow: there is no making any thing "of him." Yet a Guide, when he perceives his Charge going out of the Way, doth not revile, and ridicule, and then leave him; but leads him into the right Path. Do you also show your Antagonist the Truth, and you will see that he will follow. But till you do show it, do not ridicule him; but rather be sensible of your own Incapacity.

§. 2. How then, did Socrates use to act? He obliged his Antagonist himself to bear Testimony to him; and wanted no other Witness. Hence he might well fay, " I give up " all the reft; and am always fatisfied with the Testimony " of my Opponent: and I call in no one to vote, but my "Antagonist alone." For he rendered the Arguments drawn from natural Notions fo clear, that every one faw, and avoided the Contradiction .--- "Doth an envious Man rejoice?"---" By no means. He rather grieves." (This he moved him to fay, by proposing the contrary.)--- "Well: " and do you think Envy to be a Grief, for Mifery?" ----" And who ever envied Mifery?" --- (Therefore he makes the other fay, that Envy is a Grief, for Happiness.)--- "Doth " any one envy those who are nothing to him?"---" No, " furely." Having thus drawn [from his Opponent] a full and diffinct Idea, he then left that Point; and doth not fay, " Define " Define to me what Envy is:" and after he had defined it; "You have defined it wrong; for the Definition doth " not reciprocate to the Thing defined." Technical Terms, and therefore grievous, and fcarcely to be made intelligible to the Illiterate, which yet We, it feems, cannot part with. But we have no Capacity at all to move them, by fuch Arguments, as might induce them, in following the Track of the Appearances in their own Minds, to allow, or disprove, any Point. And, from a Consciousness of this Incapacity, those among us, who have any Modesty, give the Matter intirely up: but the greater Part, rashly entering upon these Debates, mutually confound, and are confounded; and, at last, reviling, and reviled, walk off. Whereas it was the principal and most peculiar Characteristic of Socrates, never to be provoked, in a Dispute; nor to throw out any reviling or injurious Expression: but to bear patiently with those who reviled him; and to put an End to the Controverfy. If you would know, how great Abilities he had in this particular, read Xenophon's Banquet, and you will fee, how many Controverses he ended. Hence, even among the Poets, that Person is justly mentioned with the highest Commendation, > Whose lenient Art attentive Crowds await, To still the furious Clamours of Debate. Hesiod.

But what then? This is no very fafe Affair now, and especially at Rome. For he who doth it, must not do it in a Corner; but go to some rich Consular Senator, for Instance, and question him. "Pray, Sir, can you tell me to whom you intrust your Horses?"——"Yes, certainly."

--- "Is it then, to any one indifferently, though he be igno-" rant of Horsemanship?"---" By no means."---" To " whom do you intrust your Gold, or your Silver, or your " Clothes?" ---- " Not to any one indifferently." ---- " And " did you ever confider, to whom you committed the Care " of your Body?"---" Yes, furely."---" To one skilled " in Exercise, or Medicine, I suppose,"----" Without " doubt." --- " Are these Things your chief Good; or are " you posses'd of some thing better than all of them?"----"What do you mean?"---" Something which makes use " of these; and proves, and deliberates about each of "them?"---" What then, do you mean the Soul?"----"You have guess'd right; for indeed I do mean that."----" I do really think it a much better Possession than all the " rest."---" Can you show us, then, in what manner you " have taken care of this Soul? For it is not probable, " that a Person of your Wisdom, and approved Character " in the State, should carelesty suffer the most excellent " Thing that belongs to you, to be neglected, and loft."----" No, certainly,"---" But do you take care of it yourself? " And is it by the Instructions of another, or by your own " Discovery show it ought to be done?]"-- Here, now, comes the Danger, that he may first fay, Pray, good Sir, what Bufiness is that of yours? What are you to me? Then, if you perfift to trouble him, he may lift up his Hand, and give you a Box on the Ear. I myfelf was once a great Admirer of this Method of Instruction, till I fell into fuch kind of Adventures.

CHAPTER XIII.

Of Solicitude.

§. I. THEN I fee any one folicitous, I fay, What doth this Man mean? Unless he wanted fomething or other, not in his own Power, how could he still be folicitous? A Musician, for Instance, feels no Solicitude, while he is finging by himfelf: but when he appears upon the Stage, he doth; even if his Voice be ever fo good, or he plays ever fo well. For what he wants is, not only to fing well, but likewise to gain Applause. But this is not, in his own Power. In short, where his Skill lies, there is his Courage. (Bring any ignorant Person, and he doth not mind him.) But in the Point which he neither understands, nor hath studied, there he is solicitous.

What Point is that?

He doth not understand what a Multitude is: nor what the Applause of a Multitude. He hath learnt, indeed, how to strike Bass and Treble; but what the Applause of the Many is, and what Force it hath in Life, he neither understands, nor hath studied. Hence he must necessarily tremble, and turn pale. I cannot, indeed, fay, that a Man is no Mufician, when I fee him afraid; but I can fay fomething elfe; and that not one, but many Things. And, first of all, I call him a Stranger; and fay, This Man doth not know in what Country he is: and, though he hath lived here fo long, he is ignorant of the Laws and Customs of the State; and what is permitted, and what not: nor hath he ever confulted any Lawyer, who might tell and explain to him the the Laws. Yet no Man writes a Will, without knowing how it ought to be written, or confulting fome one who doth know: nor doth he rafhly fign a Bond, or give Security. But he uses his Define and Aversion, exerts his Pursuits, Intentions, and Resolutions, without confulting any Lawyer about the Matter.

How do you mean, without a Lawyer?

He knows not, that he chuses what is not allowed him; and doth not chuse what is necessary: and he knows not what is his own, and what belongs to others: for if he did know, he would never be hindered; would never be restrained; would never be folicitous.

How fo?

Why: doth any one fear Things that are not Evils?

Doth any one fear Things, that are Evils indeed, but which it is in his own Power to prevent?

No, furely.

§. 2. If, then, the Things independent on Choice, are neither good nor evil; and all that do depend on Choice, are in our own Power, and can neither be taken away from us, or given to us, unlefs we pleafe; what room is there left for Solicitude? But we are folicitous about this paultry Body, or Estate, of ours; or about the Determination of Cacy far; and not at all about any thing internal. Are we ever folicitous not to take up a false Opinion? No: for this is in our own Power. Or not to exert our Pursuits, contrary to Nature? No: nor this neither. When, therefore, you see any one pale with Solicitude, as the Physician pro-pronounces from the Complexion, that fuch a Patient is difordered in the Spleen, another in the Liver; fo do you likewife fay, this Man is difordered in his Defires and Averfions: he cannot walk fleady; he is in a Fermentation. For nothing elfe changes the Complexion, or causes a Trembling, or sets the Teeth a chattering.

No Force, no Firmness, the pale Coward shows;
He shifts his Place; his Colour comes and goes.
Terror and Death in his wild Eye-balls stare;
With chati'ring Teeth he stands, and stiffen'd Hair.
Popp's Homer.

Therefore (a) Zeno, when he was to meet Antigonus, felt no Solicitude. For over what he admired, Antigonus had no Power; and those Things of which he had the Power, Zeno did not regard. But Antigonus felt a Solicitude when he was to meet Zeno; and with Reason: for he was desirous to please him; and this was external. But Zeno was not desirous to please Antigonus: for no one skilful in any Art, is desirous to please a Person unskilful.

I am defirous [fays one of his Scholars] to please You. For what? Do you know the Rules, by which one Man judges of another? Have you studied to understand what a good, and what a bad Man is; and how each becomes fuch? Why then are not you yourfelf a good Man?

⁽a) Antigoms Gonatas, King of Macedon, had fo great an Efteem for Zene, that he often took a Journey to Mean to vifit him; and endeaounced, by magnificent Promities, to allure him to his Court; but without Success. He gave it as a Reason, for the diffinguithed Regard which he paid him, that, though he had made him many, and very confide. he Offers, Zeno never appeared either mean or infolent.

On what Account am I not?

Because no good Man laments, nor sighs, nor groans: no good Man turns pale, and trembles, and says, "How "will such a one receive me; how will he hear me?"—As he thinks fit, Wretch. Why do you trouble yourself about what belongs to others? Is it not bis Fault, if he receives you ill?

Yes, furely.

And can one Person be in fault, and another the Sufferer (b)?

Why then are you folicitous, about what belongs to others? Well: but I am folicitous how I shall speak to him. What then, cannot you speak to him as you will?

But I am afraid I shall be disconcerted.

If you were going to write the Name of Dion, fhould you be afraid of being disconcerted?

By no means.

What is the Reason? Is it not because you have studied how to write?

Yes.

And if you were going to read, would it not be exactly the same?

Exactly.

⁽b) This is a Stoic Extravagance. The very Thing that conflitutes the Fault of the one in this Cafe is, that he makes the other fuffer. However, if, inflead of vainly affecting Infenfibility, we extend our View, to the future Rewards of those who bear ill Treatment as they ought, the Position is true and useful.

What is the Reason?

Because every Art hath a certain Assurance and Confidence, in the Subjects that belong to it.

Have you not studied then, how to speak? And what else did you study at School?

Syllogisms, and convertible Propositions.

For what Purpose? Was it not in order to talk properly? And what is that, but to talk seasonably, and cautiously, and intelligibly, and without Flutter and Hesitation; and, in consequence of all this, with Courage?

Very true.

When, therefore, you go into the Field on Horseback, are you folicitous about one, who is here now on Foot? Solicitous in a Point which you have studied, and another hath not?

Ay, but the Person [with whom I am to talk] hath Power to kill me.

Then fpeak the Truth, pitiful Wretch, and do not be arrogant; nor take the Philosopher upon you; nor conceal from yourfelf who are your Mafters: but while you may thus be laid hold on by the Body, follow every one who is ftronger than you. Socrates, indeed, had studied how to speak, who talked in such a manner to Tyrants, and Judges, and in a Prison. Diogenes (c) had studied how to speak, who talked ⁽c) When Diegenet was failing to Zigina, he was taken by Pirates, and carried to Crete; and there fet to Sale. Being afked what he could do; he answered, Govern Men: and pointing to a well-dressed Corintbian, who was passing by, Sell me (thick he) to bim; for be wants a Maßler. The Corintbian, whose Name was Xeniades, bought him, and appointed him the Tutor to his Children; and Diogenes perfectly well discharged his Trust.

in fuch a manner to Alexander, to Philip, to the Pirates, to the Perfon who bought him. This belonged to them who had ftudied the Point; who had Courage. But do you walk off about your own Affairs, and never flir from them. Retire into fome Corner, and there fit and weave Syllogifins, and propose them to others. For there is not, in you, one able To rule the facred Citadel within.

CHAPTER XIV.

Concerning NASO.

§. I. THEN a certain Roman came to him with his Son, and had heard one Lesson, This, faid Epictetus, is the Method of Teaching; and ftopt. When the other defired him to go on; Every Art, answered he, is tedious, when it is delivered to a Person ignorant and unskilful in it. Indeed the Things performed by the common Arts, quickly discover the Use for which they were made; and most of them have fomething engaging and agreeable. Thus the Trade of a Shoemaker, if one would stand by, and endeavour to comprehend it, is an unpleafant Thing: but the Shoe is useful; and, besides, not disagreeable to see. The Trade of a Smith is extremely uneasy to an ignorant Person that chances to be present (a): but the Work shows the Usefulness of the Art. You will see this much more strongly in Music: for if you stand by, while a Person is learning, it will appear to you of all Sciences the most unpleasant: but the Effects are agreeable and delightful, even to those who do not understand it.

⁽a) The Translation follows Mr. Upton. Паратирудагогть

§. 2. Now here, we imagine it to be the Work of one who studies Philosophy, to adapt his Will to whatever hap-So that none of the Things which happen, may happen against our Inclination; nor those which do not happen, be wished for by us. Hence they who have settled this Point, have it in their Power never to be disappointed of their Defire, or incur their Aversion; but to lead a Life exempt from Sorrow, Fear, and Perturbation, in themselves: and in Society, preserving all the natural and adventitious Relations of a Son, a Father, a Brother, a Citizen, a Hufband, a Wife, a Neighbour, a Fellow-Traveller, a Ruler, or a Subject. Something like this, is what we imagine to be the Work of a Philosopher. It remains to inquire, how it is to be effected. Now we fee, that a Carpenter, by learning certain Things, becomes a Carpenter; and a Pilot, by learning certain Things, becomes a Pilot. Probably, then, it is not fufficient, in the prefent Case, merely to be willing to be wife and good; but it is moreover necessary that certain Things should be learn'd. What these Things are; is the Question. The Philosophers say, that we are first to learn that there is a God; and that his Providence directs the Whole; and that it is impossible to conceal from him, not only our Actions, but even our Thoughts and Emotions. We are next to learn, what the Gods are: for fuch as they are found to be, fuch must be, who would please and obey them, to the utmost of his Power, endeavour to be. If the Deity is faithful, ba too must be faithful: if free, beneficent, and exalted, he must be free, beneficent, and exalted, likewise; and, in all his Words and Actions, behave as an Imitator of God.

§. 3. Whence, then, are we to begin?

If you will give me Leave, I will tell you. It is necessary, in the first place, that you should understand Words.

So then! I do not understand them now?

No. You do not.

How is it, then, that I use them?

Just as the Illiterate do written Expressions; and Brutes, the Appearances of Things. For Use is one Thing, and Understanding another. But if you think you understand them, bring whatever Word you please, and let us see whether we understand it, or not.

Well: but it is a grievous Thing for a Man to be confuted who is grown old; and perhaps arrived, through a regular Course of Military Service, to the Dignity of a Senator.

I know it very well: for you now come to me, as if you wanted nothing. And how can it enter into your Imagination, that there should be any thing in which you are defective? You are rich; and perhaps have a Wife and Children, and a great Number of Domestics. Cassar takes Notice of you: you have many Friends at Rome: you render to all their Dues: you know how to requite a Favour, and revenge an Injury. In what are you deficient? Suppose then, I should prove to you, that you are deficient, in what is most necessary and important to Happiness; and that hitherto you have taken care of every Thing, rather than your Duty; and, to complete all, that you understand neither what God or Man, or Good or Evil, means? That you are ignorant of all the rest, perhaps, you may bear to be told: but if I prove to you, that you are ignorant even of your felf, how will you bear with me, and how will you have Patience to flay and be convinced? Not at all. You will immediately be offended, and go away. And yet what Injury have I done you; unless a Looking-Glass injures a Person not handfome, when it shows him to himself, such as he is? Or unless a Physician can be thought to affront his Patient, when he fays to him; "Do you think, Sir, that you ail " nothing? You have a Fever. Eat no Meat To-day, and "drink Water." Nobody cries out here, "What an " intolerable Affront!" But, if you fay to any one, Your Defires are in a Fermentation; your Aversions are low; your Intentions, contradictory; your Pursuits, not conformable to Nature; your Opinions, rash, and mistaken; he presently goes away, and complains, he is affronted.

§. 4. This is the Nature of our Proceedings. As, in a crowded Fair, the Horfes and Cattle are brought to be fold, and the greatest Part of Men come either to buy or sell; but there are a few, who come only to look at the Fair, and inquire, How it is carried on; and why in that Manner; and who appointed it; and for what Purpose. Thus, in the Fair of the World, some, like Cattle, trouble themselves about nothing but Fodder. For, as to all you, who busy yourselves about Possessina, and Farms, and Domestics, and public Posts, these Things are nothing else but mere Fodder. But there are some few Men, among the Crowd, who are fond of looking on, and considering: "What then, after Y

"all, is the World? Who governs it? Hath it no Gover"nor? How is it possible, when neither a City nor a "House can remain ever so short a Time, without some "one to govern and take care of it, that this vast and beautiful System should be administered, in a fortuitous and disorderly Manner? Is there then a Governor? What fort of one is he? And how doth he govern; and what are we, who are under him? And for what designed? Have
"we some Connexion and Relation to him; or none?"
In this manner are the Few affected; and apply themselves only to view the Fair, and then depart. Well: and are they laugh'd at by the Multitude? Why, so are the Lookers-on, by the Buyers and Sellers; and, if the Cattle had any Apprehension, they too would laugh at such, as admired any thing but Fodder.

CHAPTER XV.

Concerning Those who obstinately persevere in whatever they have determined.

§. 1. SOME, when they hear fuch Difcourfes as these, That we ought to be fleady; that Choice is by Nature, free and uncompelled; and that all else is liable to Restraint, Compulsion, Slavery, and belongs to others; imagine, that they must remain immutably fix'd to every thing which they have determined. But it is first necessary, that the Determination should be a sound one. I agree, that there should be a Tension of the Nerves, in the Body; but such as appears in a healthy, an athletic Body: for, if you show me, that you have the Tension of a Lunatic, and value yourself yourself upon that, I will say to you, Get yourself to a Phyfician, Man: this is not a Tenfion of the Nerves; but a Relaxation, of another kind. Such is the Diffemper of Mind. in those who hear these Discourses in a wrong Manner: like an Acquaintance of mine, who, for no Reafon, had determined to flarve himfelf to Death. I went the third Day, and inquired what was the Matter. He answered, " I am determined." ---- Well: but what is your Motive? For, if your Determination be right, we will flay, and affift your Departure: but, if unreasonable, change it .--- "We "ought to keep our Determinations." --- What do you mean, Sir? Not all; but fuch as are right. Elfe, if you should just now take it into your Head, that it is Night, if you think fit, do not change; but perfift, and fay, We ought to keep our Determinations. What do you mean, Sir? Not all. Why do not you begin, by first laying the Foundation, in an . Inquiry, whether your Determination be a found one, or not; and then build your Firmness and Constancy, upon it. For, if you lay a rotten and crazy Foundation, you must not build (a): and the greater and more weighty the Superstructure is, the sooner will it fall. Without any Reason, you are withdrawing from us, out of Life, a Friend, a Companion, a Fellow-Citizen both of the fame greater (b), and leffer City: and while you are committing Murder, and destroying an innocent Person, you say, We must keep our Determinations. Suppose, by any means, it should ever come into your Head to kill me; must you keep such a Determination?

 ⁽a) Instead of οικοθομηνα τι ον, the true Reading seems to be εικοθονηντέον; and is so translated.

⁽b) The World.

164 The Discourses of Book II.

§, 2. With Difficulty this Perfon was, however, at last convinced: but there are fome at prefent, whom there is no convincing. So that now I think I understand, what before I did not, the Meaning of that common Saying, That a Fool will neither bend nor break. May it never fall to my Lot to have a wife, that is an untractable Fool, for my Friend (c). "It is all to no purpose: I am determined." So are Madmen too; but the more strongly they are determined upon Abfurdities, the more Need have they of Hellebore, Why will you not act like a fick Person, and apply yourself to a Physician? "Sir, I am sick. Give me your Assist-" ance: confider what I am to do. It is my Part to follow " your Directions." So, in the present Case: I know not what I ought to do; and I am come to learn .--- "No: but talk to me about other Things: for upon This I am determin'd." What other Things? What is of greater Confequence, than to convince you, that it is not fufficient to be determined, and to perfift. This is the Tenfion of a Madman; not of one in Health. " I will die, if you compell me to this." Why fo, Man: what is the Matter?-- "I am determined." I have a lucky Escape, that you are not determined to kill me. "I take no Money (d)." Why fo? "I am deter-" mined." Be affured, that with that very Tenfion which you now make use of to refuse it, you may, very possibly, hereafter, have as unreasonable a Propensity to take it; and again to say, "I am determined." As, in a distemper'd and rheumatic Body, the Humour tends sometimes to one Part, sometimes to another; thus it is uncertain which Way a fickly Mind will incline. But if, to its Inclination and Bent, an obstinate Tension be likewise added, the Evil then becomes desperate and incurable.

⁽c) The Translation here follows Mr. Upton's Copy.

⁽d) This, probably, is fpoken in the Perfon of one, who is offered Affiftance necessary for his Support, and refuses it.

CHAPTER XVI.

That we do not study to make use of the Principles concerning Good and Evil.

§. I. WHERE lies Good? In Choice. Where Evil? In Choice. Where neither Good nor Evil? In Things independent on Choice. What then? Doth any of us remember these Lessons out of the Schools? Doth any of us study how to answer for himself in Things, as in Questions? "Is it Day?" "Yes." "Is it Night, then?" "No." "Is the Number of Stars even?" "I cannot utell." When (a) Money is offered you, have you studied to make the proper Answer, That it is not a Good? Have you exercised yourself in such Answers as these; or only in Sophistries? Why do you wonder then, that you improve in Points which you have studied; and in those which you have not studied; there you remain the same? When an Orator knows, that he hath written well; that he hath committed to Memory what he hath written; and that he brings an agreeable Voice with him; why is he still solicitous? Because he is not contented, with what he hath studied. What doth he want, then? To be applauded by the Audience. He hath fludied the Power of Speaking, then; but he hath not studied Censure and Applause, For when did he hear from any one, what Applause, what Censure, is? What is the Nature of each? What kind of Applause is to be sought, and what kind of Cenfure to be shunned? And when did he ever apply himself, to study what follows from these Lessons? Why do you wonder then, if, in what he hath learned, he excells others; but, where he hath not fludied, he is the fame with the rest of the World? Just as a Musician knows how to play, fings well, and hath the proper Dress of his Profession; yet trembles when he comes upon the Stage. For the first he understands: but what the Multitude is, or what the Clamour and Laughter of the Multitude is, he doth not understand. Nor doth he even know, what Solicitude itself is: whether it be our own Affair, or that of others: or whether it be possible to suppress it, or not. Hence, if he is applauded, he is puffed up, when he makes his Exit: but, if he is laughed at, the Tumour is pricked, and fubfides.

⁽a) As a Bribe for bad Purpofes.

The Discourses of Book II.

T66

§. 2. Thus are we too affected. What do we admire? Externals. For what do we ftrive? Externals. And are we then in any Doubt how we come to fear, and be folicitous? What is the Confequence then, when we efteen the Things that are brought upon us, to be Evils? We cannot but fear; we cannot but be folicitous. And then we fay, "O Lord God, how shall I avoid Solicitude!" Have you not Hands, Fool? (b) Hath not God made them for you? (c) Sit down now, and pray, that your Nose may not run. Wipe it rather; and do not murmur. Well: and hath he given you nothing in the present Case? Hath not he given you Patience? Hath not he given you Magnanimity? Hath not he given you Fortitude? When you have fuch Hands as these, do you still seek for Somebody to wipe your Nose? (d) But we neither study nor regard these Things. For give me but one, who cares how he doth any thing, who doth not regard the Success of any thing, but his own Manner of acting. Who, when he is walking, regards his own Action? Who, when he is deliberating, the Deliberation itself, and not the Success that is to follow it? If it happens to succeed, he is elated; and cries, " How prudently have we deli-" berated! Did not I tell you, my dear Friend, that it was " impossible, when we considered about any thing, that it " should not happen right?" But, if it miscarries, the poor Wretch is dejected; and knows not what to fay about the Matter. Who among us ever, upon this Account, confulted

⁽b) The Order of this Paffage should be——Sit down now, and pray, that your Nose may not run. Have you not Hands, Fool? Hath not God made them for you, &c. But Episteius, probably, might speak extempore in this inverted manner: and Arrian proposes to deliver what he said, with the greatest Exacthers.

⁽c) Sitting, probably some particular Sort of it, was anciently (see Judge's vx. 26. 1 Cbr. xvii. 16.) one Posture of Devotion. Our Ancestors, in Queen Elizabeth's Time, called Kneeling, Sitting on their Knees. A mixed Posture of Sitting and Kneeling is now used, by some Nations in Prayer.

- a Diviner? Who of us ever flept in a Temple, to be informed concerning his Manner of acting? (e) I fay, who? Show me one (that I may fee what I have long fought) who is truly noble and ingenuous. Show me either a young or an old Man (f).
- §. 3. Why then are we ftill furprifed, if, when we waste all our Attention on the Materials of Action, we are, in the Manner of Action itself, low, fordid, worthless, fearful, wretched, and a mere Heap of Disappointment and Misery? For we do not care about these Things, nor make them our Study. If we had fear'd, not Death or Exile, but Fear itself, we should have studied not to fall into what appears to us to be evil. But, as the Case now stands, we are eager and loquacious in the Schools; and, when any little Question arises about any of these Things, we are prepared to trace its Consequences: but drag us into Practice, and you will find us miserably shipwrecked. Let some alarming Appearance attack us; and you will perceive what we have been studying, and in what we are exercised. Besides this Negligence, we always accumulate somewhat else, and represent Things greater than the Reality. In a Voyage, for Inftance, cafting my Eyes down upon the Ocean below, and looking round me, and feeing no Land, I am out of my Wits; and imagine, that, if I should be shipwrecked, I must swallow all that Ocean: nor doth it once enter my Head, that three Pints are enough to do my Business. What is it then, that alarms me? The Ocean? No: but my own Principle. Again: in an Earthquake, I imagine the City is going to fall upon me: but is not one little Stone enough, to knock my Brains out? What is it then, that oppresses, and puts us out of our Wits? Why, what elfe, but our Principles? For what is it, but mere Principle, that oppresses him, who leaves his Country, and is feparated from his Acquaintance, and Friends, and Place, and usual Manner of Life? When Children cry, if their Nurse happens to be absent for a little while, give them a Cake, and they forget their Grief. Shall we compare you to these Children then?

(e) The Heathen had certain Temples, in which it was usual for Persons to sleep, in order to receive Oracles by Dreams. One of the most celebrated Places, appropriated to this Purpose, was the Temple of Amphiaraus. See Philostratus, p. 771.

⁽f) It is observable, that this most practical of all the Philosophers, owns his Endeavours met with little or no Success, among his Scholars. The Apostles speak a very different Language, in their Epistles to the first Converts to Christianity: and the Acts of the Apostles, and all the Monuments of the primitive Ages, bear Testimony to the Reformation of Manners produced by the Gospel. This Difference of Success might indeed justly be expected, from the Difference of the two Systems.

No, indeed. For I do not defire to be pacified by a Cake; but by right Principles. And what are they?

Such as a Man ought to ftudy all Day long, so as not to be attached to what doth not belong to him; neither to a Friend, to a Place, an Academy; nor even to his own Body: but to remember the Law, and to have that constantly before his Eyes. And what is the divine Law? To preserve inviolate what is properly our own: not to claim what belongs to others: to use what is given us; and not defire what is not given us: and, when any thing is taken away, to restore it readily; and to be thankful for the Time you have been permitted the Use of it; and not cry after it, like a Child for its Nurse and its Manma. For what doth it fignily, what what gets the better of you, or on what you depend? And in what are you fuperior to him, who cries for a Puppet, if you lament for a paultry Academy, and a Portico, and an Affembly of young People; and fuch-like Amufements? Another comes, lamenting, that he must no longer drink the Water of Direce (f). Why, is not the Marcian Water as good? "But I was used to that." And in time you will be used to the other. And, when you are attached to this too, you may cry again, and set yourself in Imitation of Euripides, to celebrate, in Verse,

The Baths of Nero, and the Marcian Water.

Hence see the Origin of Tragedy, when trisling Accidents befall foolish Men. "Ah, when shall I see Athens, and "the Citadel, again!" Wretch, are not you contented with what you see every Day? Can you see any thing better than the Sun, the Moon, the Stars, the whole Earth, the Sea? But if, besides, you comprehend Him who administers the Whole, and carry Him about in yourself, do you do then, when you are to leave even the Sun and Moon? Will you st crying, like an Insant? What then have you been doing in the School? What did you hear? What did you learn? Why have you written yourself a Philosopher, instead of writing the real Fact? I have made some (b) Introduc-⁽f) A beautiful clear River in Bastia, flowing into the Ismenus. The Marcian Water was conveyed by Ancus Martius to Rome. UPTON.

⁽g) Mr. Upton conjectures this to be an Allufion to some poetical, or rhetorical Description.

⁽b) Brief Summaries of any Science, for the Use of Beginners, are often so called, tions [you may fay]; and read over Chrysippus; but I have not fo much as gone near the Door of a Philosopher (i). For what Pretentions have I, to any thing of the fame kind with Socrates, who died, and who lived, in fuch a Manner? Or with Diogenes? Do you observe either of these crying, or out of Humour, that he is not to fee fuch a Man, or fuch a Woman; nor to live any longer at Athens, or at Corinth; but at Susa, for Instance, or Echatana? For doth he stay, and repine, who is at his Liberty, whenever he pleases, to quit the Entertainment, and play no longer? Why doth he not stay, as Children do, as long as he is amused? Such a one, no doubt, will bear perpetual Banishment, and a Sentence of Death, wonderful well! Why will you not be weaned, as Children are; and take more folid Food? Will you never cease to cry after your Mammas and Nurses, whom the old Women about you have taught you to bewail? "But if I go away, I shall trouble them."----You trouble them! No: it will not be you: but that which troubles you too, Principle. What have you to do then? Pluck out your [false] Principle; and, if they are wise, they will pluck out theirs too; or, if not, they will groan for themselves.

§. 4. Boldly make a desperate Push, Man, as the Saying is, for Prosperity, for Freedom, for Magnanimity. List up your Head, at last, as free from Slavery. Dare to look up to God, and say; "Make use of me for the future as Thou "wilt. I am of the same Mind: I am equal with Thee. "I resuse nothing which seems good to Thee. Lead me

⁽i) Perhaps the true Reading should be Φιλοσοφιας, Philosophy.

" whither Thou wilt. Clothe me in whatever Drefs Thou " wilt. Is it Thy Will, that I should be in a public or a " private Condition; dwell here, or be banished; be poor, " or rich? Under all these Circumstances I will make Thy " Defence to Men (k). I will show what the Nature of "every Thing is." --- No. Rather fit alone, in a warm (1). Place, and wait till your Mamma comes to feed you. If Hercules had fat loitering at Home, what would he have. been? Eurystheus, and not Hercules. Besides, by travelling through the World, how many Acquaintance, and how many Friends, had he? But none more his Friend, than God: for which Reason he was believed to be the Son of God; and was fo. In obedience to him, he went about extirpating Injuffice, and lawless Force. But you are not Hercules: nor able to extirpate the Evils of others: nor even Theseus, to extirpate the Evils of Attica. Extirpate. your own then. Expell, instead of Procrustes and Sciron (m), Grief, Fear, Defire, Envy, Malevolence, Avarice, Effeminacy, Intemperance, [from your Mind]. But these can be no otherwise expelled, than by looking up to God alone, as your Pattern: by attaching yourself to him alone, and being confecrated to his Commands. If you wish for any thing else, you will, with Sighs and Groans, follow what is ftronger than you: always seeking Prosperity without, and never able to find it. For you seek it where it is not, and neglect to seek it where it is.

⁽⁴⁾ There are innumerable Passages in St. Paul, which, in reality, bear that noble Testimony which Epistetus here requires in his imaginary Character. Such are those in which he glories in Tribulation; speaks with an heroic Contempt of Life, when set in Competition with the Performance of his Duty; rejoices in Bonds and Imprisonments, and the View of his approaching Martyrdom: and represents Afflictions as a Proof of God's Love. See Ass xx. 23, 24. Rom. v. 3, viii. 35---39... 2 Tim. iv. 6

⁽¹⁾ The Sense of the original Phrase, an Ox's Belly, is obscure to me. The French Translation hath, in your Gradle.

⁽m) Two famous Robbers, who infested Attica, and were at last killed by Theseus. Upron.

CHAPTER XVII.

· How to adapt Pre-conceptions to particular Cases.

§. 1. WHAT is the first Business of one who studies Philosophy? (a) To part with Self-Conceit. For it is impossible for any one to begin to learn what he hatha Conceit that he already knows. We all go to the Philofophers, talking at all Adventures upon negative and politive Duties; Good and Evil; Fair and Bafe. We praife, cenfure, accuse; we judge and dispute about fair and base Enterprises. And for what do we go to the Philosophers? To learn what we suppose ourselves not to know. And what is this? Theorems. We are defirous to hear what the Philosophers say, for its Elegance and Acuteness; and some with a View only to Gain. Now it is ridiculous to suppose, that a Person will learn any thing, but what he desires to learn; or make an Improvement, in what he doth not learn, But most are deceived, in the same Manner as Theopompus, the Orator, when he blames Plato, for defining every thing, " For, what, fays he, did none of us, before you, use the

⁽a) See B. H. c. 11. §. 1.

" Words Good and Just: or did we utter them as empty "Sounds, without understanding what each of them " meant?" Why, who tells you, Theopompus, that we had not natural Ideas and Pre-conceptions of each of these? But it is not possible, to adapt Pre-conceptions to their correspondent Subjects, without having minutely diffinguished them, and examined what is the proper Subject to each. You may make the fame Objection to the Physicians. For who of us did not use the Words, Wholesome and Unwholesome, before Hippocrates was born: or did we utter them as empty Sounds? For we have fome Pre-conception of Wholefome too; but we cannot adapt it. Hence, one fays, Let the Patient abstain from Meat; another, Give it him: one fays, Let him be bled; another, Cup him. And what is the Reason, but not being able to adapt the Pre-conception of Wholesome, to particular Cases? Thus, too in Life: who of us doth not talk of Good and Evil; Advantageous and Difadvantageous: for who of us hath not a Pre-conception of each of these? But is it then a distinct and perfect one? Show me this.

How shall I show it?

§ 2. Adapt it properly to particular Subjects. Plato, to go no farther, puts Definitions under the Pre-conception of Uleful; but you, under that of Uleles. Can both of you be right? How is it possible? Again: doth not one Man adapt the Pre-conception of Good, to Riches? Another, not to Riches, but to Pleasure, or Health? Upon the whole, if none of us, who use Words, either utter them without Meaning, or need to take any manner of Care in distinguishing our Pre-conceptions, why do we differ? Why do we wrangle? Why do we cenfure each other? But what Occafion have I to mention this mutual Contradiction? If you yourfelf adapt your Pre-conceptions properly, how comes it to pass, that you do not prosper? Why do you meet with any Hindrance? Let us for the prefent omit the fecond Topic, concerning the Pursuits, and the Duties relative to them: Let us omit the Third too, concerning Affent. I make you a Present of all these. Let us insist only on the First (b); which affords almost a sensible Proof, that you do not adapt your Pre-conceptions right. You defire what is possible in itself, and possible for you. Why then are you hindered? Why are not you in a prosperous Way? You do not decline what: is necessary. Why then do you incur any thing [which is your Aversion? Why are you unfortunate? When you. defire any thing, why doth it not happen? When you do not defire it, why doth it happen? For this is the greatest Demonstration of ill Success and Misery. I defire something; and it doth not happen: and what is more wretched than I? From an Impatience of this, Medea came to murder herown Children: an Action of a noble Spirit in this View; for the had a proper Impression of what it was to be difappointed of one's Defire. " Thus I shall punish him, who " hath injured and dishonoured me: and what is so wicked " a Wretch good for? But how is this to be effected? I will " murder the Children: But that will be punishing myself. "And what do I care?" This is the Error of a Soul indued with great Powers. For she knew not where the Completion of our Defires is to be found: that it is not to be had from without; nor by altering the Appointment of Things. Do not defire the Man for your Husband, and nothing which you do defire will fail to happen. Do not defire to keep him to yourfelf. Do not defire to flay at Corinth; and, in a Word, have no Will, but the Will of God; and who shall restrain you; who shall compell you, any more than Jupiter? When you have fuch a Guide, and conform your Will and Inclinations to his, what need you fear being disappointed? Yield up your Desire and Aversion [as Slaves] to Riches, or Poverty; the one will be difappointed, the other incurr'd. Yield them up to Health, Power, Honours, your Country, Friends, Children, in short, to any thing independent on Choice, you will be unfortunate. But yield them up to Jupiter, and the other Gods. Give yourfelf up to these: let these govern: let both be ranged on the same Side with thefe; and how can you be any longer unprofperous? But if, poor Wretch, you envy, and pity, and are jealous, and tremble, and never cease, a fingle Day, from complaining of yourself, and the Gods, why do you boast of your Education? What Education, Man? That you have learned convertible Syllogisms? Why do not you, if possible, unlearn all these, and begin again; convinced, that hitherto, you have not even touched upon the Point? And, for the future, beginning from this Foundation, proceed, in Order, to the Superstructure; that nothing may happen which you do not wish; and that every thing may happen which you do. Give me but one young Man, who brings this Intention with him to the School; who is a Champion for this Point; and fays, "I yield up all the reft: it fuffices me, if " once I become able to pass my Life, free from Hindrance 44 and Grief: to stretch out my Neck to all Events, as free; " and

⁽b) i. e. The Topic of the Defines and Averfions:

" and to look up to Heaven, as the Friend of God; fearing " nothing that can happen." Let any one of you show himself of such a Disposition, that I may say; "Come into " the Place, young Man, that is of right your own; for " you are destined to be an Ornament to Philosophy. Yours " are these Possessions; yours these Books; yours these " Discourses." Then, when he hath master'd, and got the better of this first Class, let him come to me again, and say; " I defire indeed to be free from Passion, and Perturbation; " but I defire too, as a pious, a philosophic, and a care-" fully attentive Man, to know, what is my Duty to God, " to my Parents, to my Relations, to my Country, and to "Strangers." "Come into the fecond Class too; for this " likewife is yours." " But I have now fufficiently studied " the fecond Class too; and I would willingly be fecure, and " (c) unshaken by Error and Delusion, not only awake, but " even when afleep; when warmed with Wine; when " difeafed with the Spleen." "You are a God, Man: your " Intentions are great."

§. 3. "No. But I, for my part, defire to understand "what Chrysippus says, in his logical Treatise of the (d) Pseu-domenos."——Go hang yourself, pitiful Wretch, with such an

⁽c) There are feveral Readings and Conjectures. I have followed Wolflus; who reads, for ασιτως, ασεισως; as agreeing best with the Senie.

⁽d) The Pfeudomenos was a famous Problem among the Stoics; and it is this. When a Perion fays, I lie; doth he lie, or doth he not? If he lies, he fpeaks Truth: if he fpeaks Truth, he lies. The Philolophers compored an Intention as this. What Good will it do you? You will read the Whole, lamenting all the while; and fay to others? trembling, " Do as I do."--- " Shall I read to " you, my Friend, and you to me?---You write (e) fur-" prifingly, Sir; and you very finely imitate the Stile of " Plato; and you, of Xenophon; and you, of Antistbenes." And thus, having related your Dreams to each other, you return again to the same State. Your Desires and Averfions, your Purfuits, your Intentions, your Refolutions, your Wishes and Endeavours, are just what they were. You do not fo much as feek for one to advise you; but are offended, when you hear fuch Things as thefe; and cry, " An ill-" natured old Fellow! He never wept over me, when I " was fetting out, nor faid; " To what a Danger are you " going to be exposed! If you come off safe, Child, I will " illuminate my House." " This would have been the " Part of a good-natured Man." Truly, it will be a mighty Happiness, if you do come off safe: it will be worth while to make an Illumination. For you (f) ought to be immortal, and exempt from Sickness, to be fure.

§. 4. Throwing away then, I fay, this Self-conceit, by which we fancy, we have gained fome Knowlege of what is many Books on this Difficulty. Chrysippus wrote fix. Philetas wasted himself to Death in studying to answer it. Menage on Diog. Laert. L. II. §. 108. BRUCKER Hist. Crit. Philos. vol. i. p. 613, 614.

⁽e) This is spoken by Epidetus, in the Person of one of his Scholars; to ridicule their complimenting each other on their Writings, while they neglected the more important Concern of moral Improvements.

⁽f) De Sei should be on esei.

useful, we should come to philosophic Reasoning, as we do to Mathematics and Music: otherwise we shall be far from making any Improvement; even if we have read over all the Collections and Compositions, not only of Chrysppus, but of Antipater and Archedemus too.

CHAPTER XVIII.

How the Appearances of Things are to be combated.

- §.1. EVERY Habit and Faculty is preferved, and increased, by correspondent Actions: as the Habit of Walking, by walking; of Running, by running. If you would be a Reader, read: if a Writer, write. But if you do not read for a Month together, but do somewhat else; you will see what will be the Consequence. So, after fitting still for ten Days, get up and attempt to take a long Walk; and you will find how your Legs are weakened. Upon the whole then, whatever you would make habitual, practise it: and, if you would not make a Thing habitual, do not practise it; but habituate yourself to something else.
- §. 2. It is the same with regard to the Operations of the Soul. Whenever you are angry, be assured, that it is not only a present Evil, but that you have increased a Habit, and added Fewel to a Fire. When you are overcome by the Company of Women, do not esteem it as a single Defeat; but that you have fed, that you have increased, your Dissoluteness. For it is impossible, but that Habits and Faculties must either be first produced, or strengthened and increased by correspondent Actions. Hence the Philofopliers derive the Growth of all Infirmities. When you once delire Money, for Example, if a Degree of Realoning fufficient to produce a Senie of the Evil be applied, the Defire ceases, and the governing Faculty of the Mind regains its Authority; whereas, if you apply no Remedy, it returns no more to its former State: but, being again excited by a correspondent Appearance, it kindles at the Desire more quickly than before; and, by frequent Repetitions, at last becomes callous (a): and by this Infirmity is the Love of Money fixed. For he who hath had a Fever, even after it hath left. him, is not in the same State of Health as before, unless he was perfectly cured: and the fame thing happens in Diftempers of the Soul likewife. There are certain Traces and Blifters left in it; which, unlefs they are well effaced, whenever a new Hurt is received in the same Part, instead of Blifters, become Sores.

§ 3. If you would not be of an angry Temper then, do not feed the Habit. Give it nothing to help its Increase. Be quiet at first, and reckon the Days in which you have not been angry. I used to be angry every Day; now every other Day; then every third and fourth Day: and, if you miss it to long as thirty Days, offer a Sacrifice of Thanksgiving to God. For Habit is first weakened, and then intirely destroy'd. "I was not vex'd To-day (b); nor the

⁽a) Hardened against proper Reflections.

⁽b) These several Facts are here supposed, to be recollected at different Times.

" next Day; nor for three or four Months after; but took " heed to myfelf, when fome provoking Things happened." Be affured, that you are in a fine Way. "To-day, when I " faw a handsome Person, I did not say to myself, O that I " could possess her And, how happy is her Husband (for he who says this, says too, how happy is her Gallant): " nor do I go on to represent her as present, as undress'd, " as lying down befide me." On this I ftroak my Head, and fay, Well done, Epictetus: thou halt folved a pretty Sophifm; a much prettier than one very celebrated in the But, if even the Lady should happen to be Schools (c). willing, and give me Intimations of it, and fend for me, and press my Hand, and place herself next to me; and I should then forbear, and get the Victory; that would be a Sophism. beyond all the Subtleties of Logic. This, and not disputing artfully, is the proper Subject for Exultation.

§. 4. How then is this to be effected? Be willing to appear beautiful in the Sight of God: be defirous to converse in Purity with your own pure Mind, and with God: and then, if any such Appearance strikes you, Plato directs you: "Have Recourse "to Expiations: Go a Suppliant to the Temples of the averting Deities." It is sufficient, however, if you propose to yourself the Example of wise and good Men, whether alive or dead; and compare your Conduct with theirs. Go to ⁽c) In this Place, and the following Lines, the Original mentions particular Forms of Argument, which are now little underflood; and could not be at all inflructive to the English Reader.

Socrates,

The DISCOURSES of Book II.

Socrates, and see him lying by Alcibiades, yet slighting his Youth and Beauty. Consider what a Victory he was conficious of obtaining! What an Olympic Prize! In what Number did he stand from Hercules (d)? So that, by Heaven, one might justily salute Him (e); Hail! incredibly (f) great, universal Victor! not those forry Boxers and Wrestlers; nor the Gladiators, who resemble them.

182

§. 5. By placing fuch an Object over-against you, you will conquer any Appearance, and not be drawn away by it. But, in the first place, be not hurried along with it, by its hasty Vehemence: but say; Appearance, wait for me a little. Let me see what you are, and what you represent. Let me try you. Then, afterwards, do not suffer it to go on drawing gay Pictures of what will follow: if you do, it will lead you where-ever it pleases. But rather oppose to it some good and noble Appearance, and banish this base and fordid one. If you are habituated to this kind of Exercise, you will see what Shoulders, what Nerves, what Sinews, you will have. But now it is mere trifling Talk, and nothing more. He is the true Practitioner, who exercises

⁽d) Hercules is faid to have been the Author of the Gymnaftic Games; and the first Victor. Those who afterwards conquered in Wrestling, and the Pancratium, were numbered from him. UPTON.

⁽c) Mr. Upton inferts reasons, which, he conjectures, should be reasons, into the Text, from his Manuscript: where, probably, it was written merely by an Accident of the Transcriber's casting his Eye upon that Word in the next Lin.. The Sense needs not this Addition, and perhaps doth better without it.

⁽f) This pompous Title was given to those, who had been Victors in all the Olympic Games.

himself against such Appearances as these. Stay, Wretch, do not be hurried away. The Combat is great, the Atchievement divine; for Empire, for Freedom, for Profperity, for Tranquility. Remember God. Invoke Him for your Aid, and Protector; as Sailors do Caftor and Pollux, in a Storm. For what Storm is greater than that which arises from violent Appearances, contending to overset our Reason? Indeed, what is the Storm itself, but Appearance? For, do but take away the Fear of Death, and let there be as many Thunders and Lightnings as you please, you will find, that, in the ruling Faculty, all is Serenity and Calm: but, if you are once defeated, and fay, you will get the Victory another Time, and then the fame thing over again; affure yourfelf, you will at last be reduced to so weak and wretched a Condition, that you will not fo much as know when you do amiss; but you will even begin to make Defences for your Behaviour, and thus verify the Saying of Hesiod:

With constant Ills, the Dilatory strive.

CHAPTER XIX.

Concerning Those who embrace Philosophy only in Word.

§ 1. THE Argument, called The ruling one, concerning which Difputants questioned each other, appears to have its Rise from hence (a). Of the following

⁽a) The curious Reader may fee this whole Matter explained, with the greatest Acuteness and Accuracy, by the very learned and ingenious Mr. Harris, in Mr. Upron's Notes.

Propositions, any Two imply a Contradiction to the Third. That every thing past is necessarily true: They are thefe. That an Impossibility is not the Consequence of a Possibility: And, That Something is a Possibility, which neither is nor will be true. Diodorus, perceiving this Contradiction, made use of the Probability of the Two first, to prove, That nothing is possible, which neither is nor will be true. Some again hold the Second and Third; That Something is possible, which neither is nor will be true; and, That an Impossibility is not the Consequence of a Possibility; and, consequently, affert, That not every thing past is necessarily true. This Way Cleanthes, and his Followers, took; whom Antipater copioufly defends. Others, laftly, maintain the First and Third; That Something is possible, which neither is nor will be true : and That every thing past is necessarily true: but then, That an Impossibility may be the Consequence of a Possibility. But all these Three Propositions cannot be at once maintained, because of their mutual Contradiction. If any one should ask me then, which of them I maintain; I answer him, That I cannot tell. But I have heard it related, That Diodorus held one Opinion about them; the Followers of Panthades, I think, and Cleanthes, another; and Chrysppus a third.

What then is yours (b)?

(c) None. Nor was I born to examine the Appearances of Things to my own Mind; to compare what is faid by ⁽b) This is spoken to EpiEletus by one of his Hearers.

⁽c) With Mr. Upton, I read oufer: but it feems necessary, that oude should likewise stand; and it is so translated.

Chap. 19. EPICTETUS.

others, and thence to form some Principle of my own, as to the Topic [which you mention]. Therefore, [in respect to it, I am no better than a Grammarian [who repeats what he hath read]. Who was the Father of Hellor? Priam. Who were his Brothers? Paris and Deiphobus. Who was his Mother? Hecuba. This I have heard related. From whom? From Homer. But I believe Hellanicus, and other Authors. have written on the fame Subject. And what better Account have I of the ruling Argument? But, if I was vain enough, I might, especially at an Entertainment (d), astonish all the Company by an Enumeration of Authors, relating to it, Chryspous hath written wonderfully, in his first Book, of Possibilities. Cleanthes and Archedonius have each written separately on this Subject. Antipater too hath written, not only in his Treatife of Possibilities, but purposely in a Discourse on the ruling Argument. Have not you read the Work? "No." Read it then .--- And what Good will it do him? He will be more trifling and impertinent than he is already. For what else have you gained by reading it? What Principle have you formed upon this Subject? But you tell us of Helen, and Priam, and the Isle of Calyplo, which never was, nor ever will be. And here, indeed, it is of no great Confequence, if you retain the Story, without forming any Principle of your own. But it is our Misfortune to do fo, much more in Morality than upon such Subjects as these.

⁽d) Some Philotophers affected to flow their Learning at fuch Times'; and it is againft this idle Oftentation that Epicterus points his Difcourfe: for the Study of Logic itfelf, under proper Regulations, he often strongly recommends.

§. 2. Talk to me concerning Good and Evil (e). Hear.

The Wind from Ilium to the Cicon's Shore Hath driv'n me---

Of Things, some are good, some evil, and some indifferent. Now the good, are the Virtues, and whatever partakes of them; and the evil, Vices, and what partakes of Vice: the indifferent, lie between these, as Riches, Health, Life, Death, Pleasure, Pain.

Whence do you know this?

Hellanicus fays it, in his Egyptian History (f). For what doth it fignify, whether one names the History of Hellanicus, or the Ethics of Diogenes, or Chrysippus, or Cleanbes? Have you then examined any of the Things, and formed a Principle of your own? But show me, how you are used to exercise yourself on Shipboard. Remember this Divi-

⁽e) This I apprehend to be fpoken by one of the Scholars of Epistetus; who feeing the Contempt with which his Mafter treats logical Subtleties, in the foregoing Paragraph, defires him to discourse upon Ethics.

⁽f) Epidetus gives this abfurd Reply to ridicule the Fondness of his Scholars for quoting Authors, and making a Parade of their Reading: and infinuates, that it is not at all material, whether a Person, who on such Subjects, means nothing further than Talk, knows what he is talking of, or blunders about it ever fo grossly.

fion (g), when the Mast rattles, and some idle Fellow stands by you, while you are fcreaming, and fays, "For Heaven's " fake, talk as you did a little while ago. Is it Vice to " fuffer Shipwreck? Or doth it partake of Vice?" Would not you take up a Log, and throw it at his Head? " What " have we to do with you, Sir? We are periffing, and " you come and jest." Again: if Gæsar should summon you, to answer an Accusation, Remember the Division. If, when you are going in, pale and trembling, any one should meet you, and fay, "Why do you tremble, Sir? What is "this Affair you are engaged in? Doth Cafar within, " give Virtue and Vice to those who approach him?"----"What do you too infult me, and add to my Evils?"----" Nay, but tell me, Philosopher, why you tremble? Is there any other Danger, but Death, or a Prison, or bodily " Pain, or Exile, or Defamation?"---" Why, what should "there be else?"---" Are any of these, Vice? Or do they " partake of Vice? What then, did you yourfelf use to say " of these Things?"---" What have you to do with me, "Sir? My own Evils are enough for me."----" You fay " right. Your own Evils are indeed enough for you; your " Bafenefs, your Cowardice, and that Arrogance, by which vou were elated, as you fat in the Schools. Why did you " plume yourfelf with what is not your own? Why did " you call yourfelf a Stoic?"

§. 3. Observe yourselves thus in your Actions, and you will find of what Sect you are. You will find, that most of you are Epicureans; a few Peripatetics, and those but loose ones (b). For, by what Action will you prove, that you think Virtue equal, and even superior, to all other Things? Show me a Stoic, if you have one (i). Where? Or how should you? You can show, indeed, a Thousand, who repeat the Stoic Reasonings. But do they repeat the Epicurean worse? Are they not just as perfect in the Peripatetic? Who then is a Stoic? As we call that a Phidian Statue, which is formed according to the Art of Phidias; so show me some one Person, formed according to the Principles which he professes. Show me one, who is fick, and happy; in Danger, and happy; dying, and happy; exiled, and happy; difgraced, and happy. Show him me; for, by Heaven, I long to fee a Stoic. But you [will fay, you] have not one perfectly formed. Show me then one who is forming: one who is approaching towards this Character. Do me this Favour. Do not refuse an old Man a Sight which he hath never yet feen. Do you suppose, that you are [asked] to show the Jupiter or Minerva of Phidias, a Work of Ivory or Gold? Let any of you show me a human Soul, willing to have the fame Sentiments with those of God: not to accuse either God or Man: not to be disappointed of its Defire, or incur its Aversion: not to be angry: not to be envious: not to be jealous: in a word, willing from a Man to become a God; and, in this poor mortal Body, aiming to have Fellowship with Jupiter. Show him to me. But you cannot. Why then do you impose upon yourselves, and play Tricks with others? Why do you put on a Drefs not your own; and walk about in it, mere Thieves and Pilferers of Names and Things, which do not belong to you? Here, I am your Preceptor, and you come to be instructed by me. And indeed my Intention is to fecure you from being restrained, compelled, hindered: to make you free, prosperous, happy; looking to God upon every Occasion, great or fmall. And you come to learn and fludy these Things. Why then do not you finish your Work, if you have the proper Intention; and I, befides the Intention, the proper Qualifications? What is wanting? When I fee an Artificer, and the Materials lying ready, I expect the Work. Now here is the Artificer; here are the Materials; what is it we want? Is not the Thing capable of being taught? It is. Is it not in our own Power then? The only Thing of all others that is fo. Neither Riches, nor Health, nor Fame, nor, in fhort, any thing else is in our Power, except a right Use of the Appearances of Things. This alone is, by Nature, not fubject to Restraint, not subject to Hindrance. Why then do not you finish it? Tell me the Cause. It must be by my Fault, or yours, or from the Nature of the Thing. The Thing itself is practicable, and the only one in our Power. The Fault then must be either in me, or in you, or, more truly, in both. Well then, shall we now, at last, bring this Intention along with us? Let us lay aside all that is past. Let us begin. Only believe me, and you will fee the Confequence.

⁽g) Of Things into good, evil, and indifferent.

⁽b) The Peripatetics held other Things besides Virtue to be good; but not in near so high a Degree.

⁽i) Sec Note e. B. ii. c. 16.

CHAPTER XX.

Concerning the Epicureans, and Academics.

§. 1. RUE and evident Propositions must, of Necessity, be used even by those, who contradict them. And, perhaps, one of the ftrongest Proofs, that there is such a Thing as Evidence, is the Necessity which those, who contradict it, are under, to make use of it. If a Person, for Inflance, should deny, that any thing is universally true, he will be obliged to affert the contrary, that nothing is univerfally true. What, Wretch, not even this itself? For what is this, but to fay, that every thing universal is false. Again: if any one should come, and fay, " Know that there is nothing " to be known; but all Things are uncertain:" or another; " Believe me, and it will be the better for you, no Man ought "to be believed in any thing:" or a Third, "Learn from " me, that nothing is to be learned; I tell you this, and will "teach the Proof of it, if you please." Now what Difference is there between fuch as these, and those who call themselves Academics? Who fay to us, "Be convinced, that no one " ever is convinced [on good Grounds]. Believe us, that " no body believes any body."

§. 2. Thus also, when Epicurus would destroy the natural Relation of Mankind to each other, he makes use of the very thing he is deftroying. For what doth he fay? " Be " not deceived; be not feduced, and miftaken. There is " no natural Relation between reasonable Beings. " me. Those who say otherwise, mislead and impose upon " you,"

" you."---Why are you concerned for us then? Let us be deceived. You will fare never the worse, if all the rest of us are perfuaded, that there is a natural Relation between Mankind; and that it is by all means to be preferved. Nay, it will be much fafer and better. Why do you give yourfelf any Trouble about us, Sir? Why do you break your Rest for us? Why do you light your Lamp? Why do you rife early? Why do you compose so many Volumes? Is it that none of us should be deceived, concerning the Gods; as if they took any Care of Men? Or that we may not suppose the Effence of Good confifts in any thing, but Pleafure? For, if these Things be so, lie down and sleep, and lead the Life of which you judge yourfelf worthy; that of a mere Reptile. Eat and drink, and fatisfy your Passion for Women, and eafe yourfelf, and fnore. What is it to you, whether others think right or wrong about these Things? For what have you to do with us? You take care of Sheep, because they afford us their Milk, their Wool, and, at last, their Flesh. And would it not be a defirable Thing, that Men might be fo lulled and enchanted by the Stoics, as to give themselves up to be milked and fleeced by you, and fuch as you? Should not these Doctrines be taught to your Brother Epicureans only, and concealed from the reft of the World; who should by all means, above all things, be perfuaded, that we have a natural Relation to each other: and that Temperance is a good Thing, in order that all may be kept fafe for you? Or is this Relation to be preserved towards some, and not towards others? Towards whom then, is it to be preferved? Towards fuch as mutually preferve, or fuch as violate it? And who violate it more, than you, who teach fuch Doctrines?

192 The Discourses of Book II.

§. 3. What was it then, that waked Epicurus from his Sleep; and compelled him to write what he did? What elfe, but that which is of all others the most powerful in Mankind, Nature; which draws every one, however unwilling and reluctant, to its own Purposes. For since, says she, you think, that there is no Relation between Mankind, write this Doctrine, and leave it for the Use of others; and break your Sleep upon that Account; and, by your own Practice, confute your own Principles. Do we fay, that Orestes was roused from Sleep by the Agitation of the Furies; and was not Epicurus waked by Furies, more cruel and avenging, which would not fuffer him to reft; but compelled him to divulge his own Evils, as Wine and Madness do the Priests of Cybele? So strong and unconquerable a Thing is human Nature! For how can a Vine have the Properties not of a Vine, but of an Olive Tree? Or an Olive Tree, not those of an Olive Tree, but of a Vine? It is impossible. It is inconceivable. Neither, therefore, is it possible for a human Creature intirely to lose human Affections. But even those who have undergone a Mutilation, cannot have their Inclinations also mutilated: and so Epicurus, when he had mutilated all the Offices of a Man, of a Mafter of a Family, of a Citizen, and of a Friend, did not mutilate the Inclinations of Humanity: for he could not, any more than the idle Academics can throw away, or blind their own Senfes; though this be, of all others, the Point they labour most. What a Misfortune is it, when any one, after having received, from Nature, Standards and Rules for the Knowlege of Truth, doth not strive to add to these, and make up their Deficiencies; but, on the contrary, endeavours to take away, and deftroy, whatever Truth may be known even by Them?

§. 4. What fay you, Philosopher? What do you think of Piety and Sanctity? If you please, I will prove, that they are good .--- Pray do prove it; that our Citizens may be converted (a), and honour the Deity, and may no longer neglect what is of the highest Importance.---Have you the Proofs, then?---I have, and I thank you. Since you are fo well pleafed with this then, learn the contrary: That there are no Gods; or, if there are, that they take no Care of Mankind; neither have we any Concern with them: that this Piety and Sanctity, which is fo much talked of by many, is only an Imposition of boasting and sophistical Men; or, perhaps, of Legislators, for a Terror and Restraint to Injustice.----Well done, Philosopher. Our Citizens are much the better for you. You have already brought back all the Youth, to a Contempt of the Deity .--- What! doth not this please you, then? Learn next, that Justice is nothing: that Shame is Folly: that the paternal Relation is nothing; the filial, nothing .---- Well faid, Philosopher: perfift; convince the Youth: that we may have many more, to think and talk like you. By fuch Doctrines as thefe, have our well-governed States flourished! Upon these was Sparta founded! Lycurgus, by his Laws, and Method of Education, introduced fuch Perfuafions as these; That it is just as honourable, as it is dishonourable, to be Slaves; and just as dishonourable, as honourable, to be free! They who died at Thermopyla, died from fuch Principles as these! And from what other Doctrines did the Athenians leave their City (b)?

⁽a) A New Teflament Word.

- §. 5. And yet, they who talk thus, marry, and produce Children; and engage in public Affairs, and get themfelves made Priests and Prophets (of whom? Of Gods that have no Existence); and consult the Pythian Priestes, only to hear Falshoods, and interpret the Oracles to others. What monstrous Impudence and Imposture!
- §. 6. (c) What are you doing, Man? You contradict your-felf every Day; and yet you will not give up these paultry Cavils. When you eat, where do you carry your Hand? To your Mouth, or to your Eye? When you bathe, where do you go? Do you ever call a Kettle, a Dish; or a Spoon, a Spit? If I were a Servant to one of these Gentlemen, were it at the Hazard of being flay'd every Day, I would plague him. "Throw some Oil into the Bath, Boy." I would take Pickle, and pour upon his Head. "What is this?" Really, Sir, an Appearance struck me so perfectly alike, as not to be distinguished from Oil. "Give me the Soup." I would carry him a Dish full of Vinegar. "Did not I ask for the Soup?"—Yes, Sir, this is the Soup.—"Is not this Vinegar?" Why so, more than Soup? "Take it

⁽b) When the Athenians found themselves unable to refift the Forces of the Persians, they left their City; and, having removed their Wives and Children, and their moveable Effects, to Trazen and Salamis, went on board their Ships, and defended the Liberty of Greece by their Fleet. UPTON from CICERO, &C.

⁽c) What follows is against the Academics, who denied the Evidence of the Senses.

" and fmell to it: take it, and tafte it." " How do you know "then, if our Senses deceive us?" If I had three or four Fellow-fervants to join with me, I would make him either choke with Paffion, and burft, or change his Opinions. But now they infult us, by making use of the Gifts of Nature, while in Words, they destroy them. Grateful and modest Men. truly! Who, if there were nothing else in the Case, while they are eating their daily Bread, dare to fay, "We do not know, " whether there be any Ceres, or Proferpine, or Pluto (d)." Not to mention, that while they enjoy the Night and Day, the Seasons of the Year, the Stars, the Earth and Sea, they are not the least affected by any of these Things; but only fludy to throw out some idle Problem; and, when they have cleared their Stomachs, go and bathe: but take not the least Care what they say; nor on what Subjects; nor to whom; nor what may be the Confequence of their Talk: whether any well-disposed young Man, by hearing such Doctrines, may not be affected by them, and so affected as intirely to lose the Seeds of his good Disposition: whether they may not furnish an Adulterer with Occasions of growing shameless in his Guilt: whether a public Plunderer may not find Excuses from these Doctrines: whether he, who neglects his Parents, may not gain an additional Confidence from them--- (e) " What then, in your Opinion, is good and " cvil.

⁽d) By thefe Terms, the Stoics meant intelligent Powers, joining, to bright the Fruits of the Earth to Maturity, and to carry on the Courfe of Nature.

⁽e) These seem to be the Words of the Academic, desirous of beginning a Dispute with Epistetus, to revenge himself, by puzzling him, for the "evil, fair and (f) base; fuch Things, or such Things?"

----Why should one say any more against such Creatures as these, or give them any Account, or receive any from them, or endeavour to convince them? By Supiter, one might sooner hope to convince the most unnatural Debauchees, than those, who are thus deaf and blind to their own Evils (g).

CHAPTER XXI.

Of Inconfistency.

s.r. THERE are fome Things which Men confefs, with Eafe; others, with Difficulty. No one, for Instance, will confess himself a Fool, or a Blockhead; but, on the contrary, you will hear every one say, "I wish "my Fortune was equal to my Mind." But they easily confess themselves fearful; and say, "I am somewhat timorous, "I confess: but in other respects you will not find me a "Fool." No one will easily confess himself intemperate in his Desires; upon no Account dishonest, nor absolutely very envious, or meddling: but many confess themselves to have the Weakness of being compassionate. What is the Reason of all this? The principal is, an Inconssistency and Confuthe severe Things which he had been saying against that Sect. But Epistetus resuses to enter into it; and gives his Reason.

⁽f) I have followed Mr. Upton's Addition of αισχερον; but, perhaps, even καλον may be an Addition, first arising from writing η κακον twice ⁽g) This refembles what our Saviour faith to the Jewift Rulers; Verily I Jay unto you, that the Publicans and the Harlots go into the Kingdon of God before you. Matt. xxi. 31.

fion in what relates to Good and Evil. But different People have different Inducements. In general, whatever they imagine to be bafe, they do not abfolutely confess. Fear and Compaffion, they imagine to belong to a well-meaning Difposition; but Stupidity, to a Slave. Offences against Society they do not own: but, in most Faults, they are brought to a Confession, chiefly from imagining, that there is something involuntary in them; as in Fear and Compassion. And, though a Person (a) should in some measure confess himself intemperate in his Desires, he accuses his Passion, and expects Forgiveness, as for an involuntary Fault. But Dishonesty is not imagined to be, by any means, involuntary. In Jealous' too, there is something, they suppose, of involuntary; and this likewise, in some degree, they confess.

§. 2. Converling among fuch Men, therefore, thus confused, thus ignorant what they say, what are, or are not, their Evils, whence they have them, and how they may be delivered of them; it is worth while, I think, to ask one's self continually, "Am I too one of these? What do I "imagine myself to be? How do I conduct myself? As a "prudent, as a temperate Man? Do I, too, ever talk at this "Rate, That I am sufficiently instructed for what may hap-"pen? Have I that Persuasion, That I know nothing, which "becomes one who knows nothing? Do I go to a Master, as to an Oracle, prepared to obey; or do I, as well as "others, like a stupid Driveller (b), enter the School, only to

(a) Mr. Upton's Copy.

⁽b) We have no Expression exactly like that in the Greek. The Translation comes the nearest to it, of any I could think on.

" learn the Hiftory [of Philosophy], and understand Books, " which I did not understand before; or, perhaps, to explain "them to others?" (c) You have been fighting at home, with your Servant, Sir: you have turned the House upsidedown, and alarmed the Neighbourhood: and do you come to me, with a pompous Show of Wisdom, and fit and pass Judgment how I explain a Sentence? How I prate whatever comes into my Head? Do you come, envious and dejected, that nothing is brought you from home? And, in the midst of the Disputations, fit thinking on nothing, but how your Father or your Brother may behave to you? " What are " they faving about me at home? Now they think I am " improving: and fay, He will come back with univerfal " Knowlege. I wish I could learn every thing before my " Return: but this requires much Labour; and nobody " fends me any thing. The Baths are very bad at " Nicopolis; and Things go very ill both at home, and " here."

§. 3. After all this, it is faid, nobody is the better for the philosophic School. Why, who comes to the School? I mean, who comes to be reformed? Who, to submit his Principles to Correction? Who, with a Sense of his Wants? Why do you wonder then, that you bring back from the School, the very Thing you carried there. For you do not come to lay asside, or correct, or change, your Principles. How should you? Far from it. Rather consider this, therefore, whether you have not what you come for. You come to talk about Theorems. Well: and are not you more impertinently talkative than you were? Do not these paultry Theorems furnish you with Matter for Oftentation? Do not you folve convertible and hypothetical Syllogisms? Why then, are you still displeased, if you have the very Thing for which you came ?--- "Very true: but, if my Child, or my " Brother, should die; or if I must die, or be tortured my-" felf, what Good will these Things do me?"----Why, did you come for this? Did you attend upon me for this? Was it upon any fuch Account, that you ever lighted your Lamp, or fat up at Night? Or did you, when you went into the Walk, propose any Appearance to your own Mind to be discussed, instead of a Syllogism? Did any of you ever go through fuch a Subject jointly? And, after all, you fay, Theorems are useless. To whom? To such as apply them For Medicines for the Eyes are not useless to those, who apply them when, and as, they ought. Fomentations are not useless: Poisers are not useless: but they are useless to some; and, on the contrary, useful to others. If you should ask me now, Are Syllogisms useful? I answer, That they are useful: and, if you please, I will show you how (d).----"Will they be of Service to me, then?"----Why: did you ask, Man, whether they would be useful to you, or in general? If any one in a Dyfentery should ask me, whether Acids be useful; I answer, They are. " Are they useful. " for me, then?"--- I fay, No. First try to get the Flux

⁽c) This feems to be spoken, by EpiEletus, to one of his Scholars.

⁽A) The Greek is pointed at an is vijo; but the Senfe remises the Stop.

Ropt, and the Exulceration healed. Do you too first get your Ulcers healed; your Fluxes stopt. Quiet your Mind, and bring it free from Distraction, to the School; and then you will know what is the Force of Reasoning.

AND THE RESERVE OF THE RESERVE OF THE PROPERTY OF THE PROPERTY

Of Friendship.

s. 1. O whatever Objects a Person devotes his Attention, these Objects he, probably, loves. Do Men ever devote their Attention then, to Evils?——By no means.
—Or even to what doth not concern them?——No: nor this.——It remains then, that Good must be the sole Object of their Attention; and, if of their Attention, of their Love too. Whoever, therefore, understands Good, is capable likewise of Love: and he who cannot distinguish Good from Evil, and Things indifferent from both, how is it possible, that he can love? The prudent Person alone then, is capable of loving.

How fo? I am not this prudent Person, yet I love my Child.

I protest it surprizes me, that you should, in the first place, confess yourself imprudent. For in what are you deficient? Have not you the Use of your Senses? Do not you diffinguish the Appearances of Things? Do not you provide such Food, and Clothing, and Habitation, as are suitable to you? Why then do you confess, that you want Prudence? In truth, because you are often struck, and disconcerted by Appearances, and their Speciousness gets the better of you; and hence you fometimes suppose the very same Things to be good, then evil, and, lastly, neither; and, in a word, you grieve, you fear, you envy, you are disconcerted, you change. Is it from hence, that you confess yourself imprudent? And are you not changeable too in Love? Riches, Pleasure, in short, the very same Things, you at some times efteem good, and at others, evil: and do not you efteem the same Persons too, alternately good and bad? And, at one time, treat them with Kindness, at another, with Emmity? One time, commend, and at another, censure them?

Yes. This too is the Cafe, with me.

Well then, can he who is deceived in another, be his Friend, think you?

No, furely.

Or doth he, who loves him with a changeable Affection, bear him genuine Good-will?

Nor he, neither.

Or he, who now vilifies, then admires him?

Nor he.

Do you not often fee little Dogs carefling, and playing with each other, that you would fay, nothing could be more friendly: but, to learn what this Friendflip is, throw a Bit of Meat between them, and you will fee. Do you too throw a Bit of an Eftate, betwixt you and your Son, and you will fee, that he will quickly wish you under Ground, and you him: and then you, no doubt, on the other hand, will exclaim; What a Son have I brought up! He would bury me alive! Throw in a pretty Girl, and the old Fellow and the young one will, both, fall in Love with her: or let Fame or Danger intervene, the Words of the Father of Admetus will be yours (a):

You hold Life dear: Doth not your Father too?

Do you suppose, that he did not love his own Child, when he was a little one? That he was not in Agonies, when he had a Fever; and often wished to undergo that Fever in his stead? But, after all, when the Tryal comes home, you see what Expressions he uses. Were not Executes and Polynics born of the same Mother, and of the same Father? Were they not brought up, and did they not live,

⁽a) Admetus, King of Theffaly, being deftined to die, Apollo obtained a Reverfal of his Sentence from the Fates, on Condition, that some Perfon could be found to die in his stead. Admetur tried all his Friends, and, among the rest, his Father, Pheres; but no one chose to be his Representative, but his Wise, Aleysiis. After her Death, Pheres is introduced preparing Honours for her Funeral, and condoling with his Son, on her Loss. Admetus rejects his Presents, with great Indignation; and makes him the severest Reproaches, on his Cowardice and Mean-figiritedness, in not parting with a sew remaining Years of Life, to save his Son from an untimely Death; and in suffering Aleysii to descend to the Grave for him, in the Bloom of Youth. The Quotation made by Episteus, is Part of the Answer of Pheres, to the Reproaches of his Son.

Some of the finest and most touching Parts of the Dialogue, in Edward and Eleonora, are taken from the Aleessis, but Mr. Thompson is much happier, in the Conduct of his Story, than Euripides. Eleonora exposes herielf to Death, against the Consent, and without the Knowlege, of her Husband; which by no means appears to have been the Case of Aleessis. This Circumstance renders Admetus, a most despicable Character, throughout the Play; and the Reproaches which he throws upon Pheres appear absurd, and shocking. It is a little remarkable, that Epistetus should treat the Father with so much Contempt, and bestow none on the Son, to whom it was, at least equally, due. See B. III. c. 20. § 1.

and eat, and fleep, together? Did not they kifs and fondle each other? So that any one, who faw them, would have laughed at all the Paradoxes, which Philosophers utter about Love. And yet, when a Kingdom, like a Bit of Meat, was thrown betwixt them, fee what they fay, and how eagerly they wish to kill each other (b). For universally, be not deceived, no Animal is attached to any thing fo ftrongly, as to its own Interest. Whatever therefore, appears a Hindrance to that, be it Brother, or Father, or Child, or Mistress, or Friend, is hated, abhorred, execrated; for, by Nature, it loves nothing like its own Interest. This is Father, and Brother, and Family, and Country, and God (c). Whenever therefore, the Gods feem to hinder this, we vilify even them, and throw down their Statues, and burn their Temples; as Alexander ordered the Temple of Esculapius to be burnt, because he had loft the Man he loved.

§. 2. Whenever therefore, any one makes his Interest to consist in the same thing with Sanctity, Virtue, his Country, Parents, and Friends, all these are secured: but, where-ever they are made to interfere, Friends, and Country, and Family, and Justice itself, all give way, borne down by the Weight of Self-interest. For wherever I and mine are placed, thier must every Animal gravitate. If in Body, that will sway us; if in Choice, that; if in Externals, these. If therefore, I be placed in a right Choice, then only, I shall be a Friend, as Sonylor a Hathery such as I ought. For, in that Case, if will be for any Intesest to preserve the faithful, the modest, the patient, the abstinent, the beneficent, Character; to keep the Relations of Life inviolate. But, if I place my self in one Thing, and Virtue in another, the Doctrine of Epicurus will stand its Ground, That Virtue is nothing, for mere Opinion (d).

⁽b) The Original quotes fome Verses from Euripides, of a Dialogue between Eteocles and Polynices, before the Walls of Thebes; of which the Translation gives the general Sense.

⁽c) See Matt. xii. 50.

§. 3. From this Ignorance it was, that the Athenians and Lacedemonians quarreled with each other; and the Thebans with both: the Perfan King, with Greece; and the Macedonians, with both: and now the Romans, with the Geies. And, in fill remoter Times, the Trojan War arose from the same Cause. Paris was the Guest of Menalaus; and whoever had seen the mutual Proofs of Good-will, that pais'd between them, would never have believed, that they were not Friends. But a tempting Bit, a pretty Woman, was thrown in between them; and for this they went to War. At present, therefore, when you see dear Brothers have, in Appearance, but one Soul, do not immediately pronounce upon their Friend-hip; not though they should swear it, and affirm it was impossible to live adunder. (For the governing Faculty of a bad Man is faithles, unsettled, injudicious; successively vanquished by different Appearances). But inquire, not as others do, whether they were born of the same Parents, and brought up together; and under the same Preceptor; but this Thing only, in what they place their Interest; in Externals, or in Choice. If in Externals, no more call them Friends, than saithful, or constant, or brave, or free; nay, noweven Men, if you are wise. For it is no Principle of Humanity, that makes them bite and wilify each other; and take Possessing of public Assemblies, as wild Beasts do of Solitudes and Mountains; and convert Courts of Justice into Dens of Robbers: nor that prompts them to be intemperate, Adulterers, Seducers; or leads them into other Offences, hat Men commit against each other, from the one single Principle, by which they place themselves, and their own Concerns, in Things independent on Choice.

⁽d) By felf is here meant the proper Good, or, as Solomon expresses it, Eccl. xii. 13, The Whole of Man. The Stoic proves excellently, the Inconvenience of placing this, in any thing but a right Choice (a right Disposition and Behaviour): but how it is the Interest of each Individual, in every Case, to make that Choice, in Preserence to present Pleasure, and in Desiance of present Sufferings, appears only from the Doctrine of a future Recompence.

§. 4. But, if you hear, that these Men, in reality suppose Good to be placed only in Choice, and in a right Use of the Appearances of Things; no longer take the Trouble of inquiring, if they are Father and Son, or old Companions and Acquaintance; but as boldly pronounce, that they are Friends, as that they are faithful and just. For where else can Friendship be met, but with Fidelity and Modesty, and a Communication (e) of Virtue; and of no other Thing?

Well: but fuch a one paid me the utmost Regard, for so long a Time; and did not he love me?

How can you tell, Wretch, if that Regard be any other than he pays to his Shoes, or his Horfe, when he cleans ⁽e) Perhaps Soois, in the Greek, should be Sixfoois.

The Discourses of Book II.

them? And, how do you know, but when you cease to be a necessary Utensil, he may throw you away, like a broken Stool?

Well: but it is my Wife; and we have lived together many Years.

And how many did Eriphyle live with Amphiaraus; and was the Mother of Children, and not a few? But a Bracelet fell in between them. What was this Bracelet? The Principle [she had formed] concerning such Things. This rurned her into a savage Animal: this cut afunder all Love; and suffered neither the Wife, nor the Mother, to continue such (f).

§. 5. Whoever therefore, among you, studies to be, or to gain a Friend, let him cut up all these Principles by the Root; hate them; drive them utterly out of his Soul. Thus, in the first place, he will be secure from inward Reproaches, and Contests; from Change of Mind, and Self-torment. Then, with respect to others; to every one, like himself, he will be unreserved. To such as are unlike, he will be patient, mild, gentle, and ready to forgive them, as failing in Points of the greatest Importance: but severe to none; being fully convinced of Plato's Doctrine, That the Soul is never willingly deprived of Truth. Without all this, you may, in many Respects, live as Friends do; and drink, and lodge, and travel together, and be born of the same Parents; and so may (g) Serpents too: but neither they, nor you, can ever be Friends, while you have these brutal and execrable Principles.

⁽f) Amphiaraus married Eriphyle, the Sifter of Adraftus, King of Argas. He was an excellent Soothfayer; and, by his Skill, forefaw, that it would prove fatal to him, if he engaged himfelf in the Teleban War. Wherefore, to avoid inevitable Deftruction, he hid himfelf: but was difcovered by his Wife Eriphyle, whom Polynics had corrupted, with a Prefent of a golden Chain. Status: Telebais, L. VI.

CHAPTER XXIII.

Of the Faculty of Speaking.

§. I. A BOOK will always be read with the greater Pleafure, and Ease too, if it be written in a fair. Character: therefore every one will the more easily attend to Discourses likewise, ornamented with proper and beautiful Expressions. It (a) ought not then to be said, that there is no such Thing as the Faculty of Elocution: for this would be at once the Part of an impious and seaful Person (b). Impious; because he dishonours the Gifts of God; just as if he should deny any Use in the Faculty of Sight, Hearing, and Speech itself. Hath God then given you Eyes in vain? Is it in vain, that he hath insused into them, such a strong ⁽g) Mr. Upton's Copy.

⁽a) Thefe are the Words of Epifettu; to which there are others equivalent afterwards. His Meaning, probably, is, that the Value and Ufefulness of the Faculty of Elocution ought not to be denied: in Opposition to the Doctrine of Epicarus, who declared all the liberal Arts and Sciences to be ufeless and mischievous. See Dios. LAERT. L. X. §. 6. and MENAGE'S Notes there.

⁽b) He proves the Timidity at the Beginning of §. 3.

and active Spirit, as to be able to represent the Forms of diffant Objects (c)? What Messenger is so quick and diligent? Is it in vain, that He hath made the intermediate Air, fo vielding, and elastic, that the Sight penetrates through it? And is it in vain, that He hath made the Light; without which all the rest would be useless? Man, be not ingrateful; nor, on the other hand, unmindful of your fuperior Advantages (d): but for Sight, and Hearing, and indeed for Life itself, and the Supports of it, as Fruits, and Wine, and Oil, be thankful to God: but remember, that He hath given you another Thing, fuperior to them all; which makes use of them, proves them, estimates the Value of each (e). For what is it that pronounces upon the Value of each of these Faculties? Is it the Faculty itself? Did you ever perceive the Faculty of Sight or Hearing, to fay any thing concerning itself? Or Wheat, or Barley, or Horses, or Dogs? No. These Things are appointed as Instruments and Servants, to obey that which is capable of using the Appearances of Things. If you inquire the Value of any thing; of what do you inquire? What is it that answers you (f)? How ⁽e) It was an old Notion, that Vifion was performed by the Emiflion of Rays from the Eye to the Object, not the Admiffion of Rays from she Object into the Eye; and to this Epidetus here refers.

⁽d) Mr. Upton gives a different Senfe to χρεισσονων; but I think, that both παλιν, and what afterwards follows, justifies the Englife Translation.

⁽e) See B. I. c. 1.

⁽f) The Hearer is understood in this Place to say, The Faculty of Choice. It is not improbable, however, that the Greek Word regoscipation, may have been omitted in transcribing.

then can any Faculty be fuperior to this; which both uses all the rest as Instruments, and tries and pronounces concerning each of them? For which of them knows, what itself is; and what is its own Value? Which of them knows, when it is to be used, and when not? Which is it, that opens and shuts the Eyes, and turns them away from improper Objects? Is it the Faculty of Sight? No: but that of Choice. Which is it, that opens and shuts the Ears? What is it, by which they are made curious and inquifitive; or, on the contrary, deaf, and unaffected by what is faid? Is it the Faculty of Hearing? No: but that of Choice. Will this then, perceiving itself to exist in [Man amidst] the other Faculties, [which are] all blind and deaf, and unable to difcern any thing, but those Offices, in which they are appointed to minister, and be subservient to it; and that itself alone fees clearly, and diffinguishes the Value of each of the rest; will this, I fay, inform us, that any thing is supreme, but itself? What doth the Eye, when it is opened, do more, than see? But whether we ought to look upon the Wife of any one, and in what manner, what is it that tells us? The Faculty of Choice. Whether we ought to believe, or to difbelieve what is faid; or whether, if we do believe, we ought to be moved by it, or not; what is it that tells us? Is it not the Faculty of Choice? Again: the very Faculty of Elocution, and that which ornaments Discourse, if there be any such peculiar Faculty, what doth it more, than merely ornament and arrange Expressions, as Curlers do the Hair? But whether it be better to speak, or to be filent; or better to speak in this, or in that Manner; whether this be decent, or indecent; and the Seafon and Use of each; what is it that tells us, but the Faculty of Choice ?

Choice? What then, would you have it appear, and bear Testimony against itself? What means this? If the Case be thus, that which ferves, may be superior to that to which it is subservient; the Horse, to the Rider; the Dog, to the Hunter; the Instrument, to the Musician; or Servants, to the King. What is it that makes use of all the rest? Choice. What. takes care of all? Choice. What destroys the whole Man. at one time, by Hunger; at another, by a Rope, or a Precipice? Choice. Hath Man, then, any thing stronger than this? And how is it possible, that what is liable to Restraint should be stronger, than what is not? What hath a natural Power of hindering the Faculty of Sight? Both Choice. and what depends on Choice. And it is the fame of the Faculties of Hearing and Speech. And what hath a natural Power of hindering Choice? Nothing independent on itself. only its own. Perversion. Therefore Choice alone is Vice : Choice alone is Virtue.

§. 2. Since, then, Choice is fuch a Faculty, and placed in Authority over all the reft, let it come forth, and fay to us, that the Body is, of all Things, the most excellent. If even the Body itself pronounced itself to be the most excellent, it could not be borne. But now, what is it, Epicarus, that pronounces all this? What was it, that composed Volumes, concerning (g) the End of [Being], that affumed a philosophic Beard; that, as it was dying, ⁽g) Celebrated Treatifes on these Subjects, composed by Epicurus.

wrote, that it was then spending its last and happiest Day (b)? Was this, Body, or was it the Faculty of Choice? And can you then, without Madness, confess any thing superior to this? Are you in reality to deaf and blind? What then, doth any one, dishonour the other Faculties? Heaven forbid! Doth any one deny, that the Faculty of Sight (i) is useful, and preferable [to the Want of it]? Heaven forbid! It would be flupid, impious, and ungrateful to God. But we render to each its Due. There is some Use of an Ass, though not fo much as of an Ox; and of a Dog, though not fo much as of a Servant; and of a Servant, though not fo much as of the Citizens; and of the Citizens, though not fo much as of the Magistrates. And, though some are more excellent than others, those Uses, which the last afford, are not to be despised. The Faculty of Elocution hath its Value, though not equal to that of Choice. When therefore I talk thus, let not any one suppose, that I would have you neglect Elocution, any more than your Eyes, or Ears, or Hands, or Feet, or Clothes, or Shoes. But if you ask me, what is the most excellent of Things, what shall I say? I cannot fay, Elocution; but a right Choice: for it is that which makes use of this, and all the other Faculties, whether great or fmall. If this be fet right, a bad Man becomes good; if it be wrong, a good Man becomes wicked. By this we are unfortunate, fortunate; we disapprove, or approve each other. In a word, it is this, which, neglected, forms Unhappiness; and, well cultivated, Happiness.

⁽b) These Words are Part of a Letter written by Epicurus, when he was dying, to one of his Friends. See Diog. LAERT. L. X. §. 22.

⁽i) Probably for repeatering should be read oparism; which Word is used by EpiEletus, but a little more than a Page before.

§. 3. But to take away the Faculty of Elocution; and to fay, that it is in reality nothing, is not only ingrateful to those who gave it, but cowardly too. For such a Person feems to me to be afraid, that, if there be any fuch Faculty, we may not, on occasion, be able to treat it with Contempt. Such are they too, who deny any Difference between Beauty, and Deformity. Was it possible then, to be affected in the fame Manner by feeing Therfites, as Achilles; or Helen, as any (k) other Woman? These also are the foolish and clownish Notions of those, who are ignorant of the Nature of Things; and afraid, that, whoever perceives a Difference, must prefently be carried away, and overcome. But the great Point is, to leave to each Thing its own proper Faculty; and then to fee what the Value of that Faculty is, and to learn what is the principal Thing, and, upon every Occasion, to follow that, and to make it the chief Object of our Attention: to consider other Things as trifling in Comparison of this; and yet, as far as we are able, not to neglect even these. We ought, for Instance, to take care of our Eyes; but not as of the principal Thing, but only on account of the principal: because that will no otherwise preserve its own Nature, than by making a due Estimation of the rest. and preferring some to others. What is the usual Practice then? That of a Traveller, who returning into his own Country, and meeting on the Road with a good Inn, being pleafed with the Inn, fhould remain at the Inn. Have you forgot your Intention, Man? You were not travelling to this Place, but only ibrough it. "But this is a fine Place." And how many other fine Inns are there, and how many pleafant Fields? But only to be paft through in your Way. The Bufines is, to return to your Country; to relieve the Anxieties of your Family; to perform the Duties of a Citizen; to marry; have Children; and go through the public Offices. For you did not fet out, to chuse the finest Places; but to return, to live in that where you were born, and of which you are appointed a Citizen.

⁽k) Mr. Upton's Reading he eruxe.

§. 4. Such is the present Case. Because by Speech, and verbal Precepts, we are to arrive at Perfection; and purify our own Choice; and rectify that Faculty, of which the Office is, the Use of the Appearances of Things: and. because, for the Delivery of Theorems, a certain Manner of Expression, and some Variety and Subtilty of Discourse, becomes necessary; many, captivated by these very Things, one, by Expression, another, by Syllogisms, a third, by convertible Propositions, just as our Traveller was by the good Inn, go no further: but fit down and waste their Lives shamefully there, as if amongst the Sirens. Your Business, Man, was to prepare yourself for such an Use of the Appearances of Things, as Nature demands: Not to be frustrated of your Defires, or incurr your Aversions: never to be difappointed, or unfortunate: but free, unrestrained, uncompelled; conformed to the Administration of Jupiter; obedient to that; finding fault with nothing: but able to fave from your whole Soul, the Verses which begin, Conduct!

Conduct me, Jove; and thou, O Destiny.

While you have fuch a Bufiness before you, will you be fo pleafed with a pretty Form of Expression, or a few Theorems, as to chuse to stay and live with them, forgetful of your Home; and fay, "They are fine Things!" Why, who fays they are not fine Things? But only as a Passage; as an Inn, For, could you speak like Demosthenes, what hinders, but that you might be a disappointed Wretch? Could you refolve Syllogisms like Chrysippus, what hinders, but that you might be miserable, forrowful, envious, in short, disturbed, unhappy? Nothing. You see then, that these are mere Inns, of small Value; and that your Point in View, is quite another Thing. When I talk thus to fome, they suppose, that I am overthrowing all Care about Speaking, and about Theorems: but I do not overthrow that; only the resting in these Things without End, and placing our Hopes there. If any one, by maintaining this, hurts an Audience, place me amongst those hurtful People: for I cannot, when I fee one Thing to be the principal and most excellent, call another so, to gain your Favour.

CHAPTER XXIV.

Concerning a Person whom he treated with Disregard.

§. I. WHEN a certain Perfor faid to him; "I have "often come to you, with a Defire of hearing "you; and you have never given me any Answer; but now, "if possible, I intreat you to say something to me:" Do you think, think, replied Epistetus, that, as in other Things, so in Speaking, there is an Art, by which he, who understands it, speaks skilfully, and he, who doth not, unskilfully?

I do think fo.

He then, who, by speaking, both benefits himself, and is able to benefit others, must speak skilfully; but he who rather hurts, and is hurt, must be unskilful in this Art of Speaking. For you may find some Speakers hurt, and others benefited. And are all Hearers benefited by what they hear? Or will you find some benefited, and some hurt(a)?

Both.

Then those who hear skilfully are benefited, and those who hear unskilfully, hurt.

Granted.

Is there an Art of Hearing, then, as well as of Speaking?
It feems fo.

If you please, consider it thus too. To whom, do you think, the Practice of Music belongs?

To a Musician.

To whom the proper Formation of a Statue?

To a Statuary.

And do not you imagine some Art necessary, to view a Statue skilfully?

I do.

If, therefore, to fpeak properly belongs to one who is skilful, do not you fee, that to bear with Benefit belongs likewise to one who is skilful? For the present, however, if you please, let us say no more of doing Things perfectly, and with Behefit, fince we are both far enough, from any thing of that Kind: but this feems to be universally confess, that he, who would hear Philosophers, needs some Kind of Exercise in Hearing. Is it not so? Tell me then, on what I shall speak to you? On what Subject are you able to hear me (b)?

⁽a) 2 Cor. ii. 16.

On Good and Evil.

The Good and Evil of what? Of a Horse?

Of an Ox.

No. Of No.

What then, of a Man?

Yes.

Do we know, then, what Man is? What is his Nature; what our Idea of him is; and how far our Ears are open in respect to this Matter (c). Nay, do you understand what Nature is; or are you able, and in what Degree, to comprehend me, when I come to say; "But I must use Demonstration to you?" How should you? Do you comprehend what Demonstration is; or, how a Thing is demonstrated; or by what Methods; or, what resembles a Demonstration, and yet is not a Demonstration? Do you know what True, or False is? What is consequent to a Thing, and what contradictory? Or unsuitable, or dissonant? But I must excite you to Philosophy. How shall I show you that Contradiction, among the Generality of Mankind, by which they differ, concerning Good and Evil, Profitable and Unprofitable, when you know not what Contradiction means? Show me then, what I shall gain, by discoursing with you? Excite an Inclination in me, as a proper Pasture excites an Inclination to eating, in a Sheep: for if you offer him a Stone, or a Piece of Bread, he will not be excited. Thus we too have certain natural Inclinations to fpeaking, when the Hearer appears to be fomebody; when he gives us Encouragement: but if he fits by, like a Stone, or a Tuft of Grafs, how can he excite any Defire in a Man? Doth a Vine fay to an Husbandman, " Take care of me?" No: but invites him to take care of it, by showing him, that, if he doth, it will reward him for his Care. Who is there, whom engaging sprightly Children do not invite to play, and creep, and prattle, with them? But who was ever taken with an Inclination to divert himself, or bray, with an Ass? For, be the Creature ever fo little, it is still a little Ass.

⁽b) See John viii. 43.

⁽ε) Κατα ποσον, περι του, should be κατα ποσον περι τουτου. There is no Need of altering τα ανα περημερα. Opening the Ear, is a Phrase of Scripture. Job xxxiii. 16. xxxvi. 10. Jf. xlii. 20. Mark vii. 34, 35. And even digging open the Ear. Pf. xl. 6. in the Hebrew.

§. 2. Why do you fay nothing to me, then?

I have only this to fay to you: That, whoever is ignorant what he is, and wherefore he was born, and in what kind of a World, and in what Society; what Things are good, and what evil; what fair, and what bafe: who understands neither Discourse, nor Demonstration; nor what is true, nor what is false; nor is able to distinguish between them: such a one will neither exert his Desires, nor Aversions, nor Pursuits, conformably to Nature: he will neither intend, nor assent, nor deny, nor suspend, his Judgment, conformably to F f

Nature: but will wander up and down, intirely deaf and blind, supposing himself to be somebody (d); while he is in reality, nobody. Is there any thing new, in all this? Is not this Ignorance the Caufe of all the Errors that have happened, from the very Original of Mankind? Why did Agamemnon and Achilles differ? Was it not for want of knowing what is advantageous, what difadvantageous? Doth not one of them fay, It is advantageous to reftore Chryleis to her Father; the other, That it is not? Doth not one fay, That he ought to take away the Prize of the other; the other, That he ought not? Did they not, by these means, forget who they were, and for what Purpose they had come there? Why, what did you come for, Man; to gain a Miftress, or to fight?----" To fight." --- With whom? With the Trojans, or Greeks?" --- "With the Trojans." --- Leaving Hector, then, do you draw your Sword upon your own King? And do you. good Sir, forgetting the Duties of a King,

Intrusted with a Nation, and its Cares, go to fquabbling, about a Girl, with the bravest of your Allies; whom you ought, by every Method, to conciliate and preferve? And will you be inferior to a subtle Priest, who pays. his Court, with the utmost Care, to you fine Gladiators?——You see the Effects, which Ignorance of what is advantageous, produces.——"But I am rich [you may say], as well as other "People."——What, richer than Agamemnon?——"But I am ⁽d) Δοχων μεν τις ειναι, ων δ' αυθεις, is very near to θοχει ειναι τι, μπθεν ων, Gal. vi. 3. There is a fimilar Expression of Plate, at the End of the Apology of Sucrates.

" hand-

"handsome too."—What, handsomer than Achilles?—
"But I have fine Hair too."—Had not Achilles finer and brighter? Yet he neither combed it nicely, nor curled it.—
"But I am strong too."—Can you lift such a Stone then, as Hector, or Ajax?—"But I am of a noble Family too."
—Is your Mother a Goddes, or your Father descended from Jupiter? And what Good did all this do Achilles, when he sat crying for a Girl?——"But I am an Orator."—And was not He? Do not you see how he treated the most eloquent of the Greeks, Phænix and Ulysses? How he struck them dumb? This is all I have to say to you; and even this, against my Inclination.

Why fo?

Because you have given me no Encouragement. For what can I see in you, to encourage me, as spirited Horses do their Riders? Your Person? That you disfigure. Your Dress? That is effeminate. Your Behaviour? Your Look? Absolutely nothing. When you would hear a Philosopher, do not say to him, "You tell me nothing;" but only show yourfelf worthy, or fit, to bear; and you will find, how you will move him to speak.

CHAPTER XXV.

That Logic is necessary.

WHEN one of the Company faid to him, "Convince "me that Logic is necessary;" Would you have me demonstrate it to you, says he?—"Yes."—Then I must use a demonstrative Form of Argument,—"Granted."—

Ff 2 And

And how will you know then, whether I argue fophiftically? On this, the Man being filent; You fee, fays he, that, even by your own Confession, Logic is necessary; since, without its Affistance, you cannot learn so much as whether it be necessary, or not.

CHAPTER XXVI.

What is the Property of Errors in Life.

S. I. EVERY Error in Life implies a Contradiction: for, fince he who errs, doth not mean to err, but to be in the Right, it is evident, that he acts contrary to his Meaning. What doth a Thief mean? His own Interest. If, then, Thieving be against his Interest, he acts contrary to his own Meaning. Now every rational Soul is naturally averse to Self-contradiction: but so long as any one is ignorant, that it is a Contradiction, nothing restrains him from acting contradictorily: but, whenever he discovers it, he must as necessarily renounce and avoid it, as any one must diffent from a Falshood, whenever he perceives it to be a Falshood: but, while this doth not appear, he affents to it, as to a Truth.

§. 2. He then is an able Speaker, and excels at once in Exhortation and Conviction, who can difcover, to each Man, the Contradiction by which he errs, and prove clearly to him, that what he would, he doth not; and what he would not do, that he doth (a). For, if that be fhown, he will depart from it, of his own accord: but, till you have shown it, be not surprised that he remains where he is a for he doth it on the Appearance, that he acts rightly (b). Hence Socrates, relying on this Faculty, used to say, "It is not my Custom to cite any other Witness of my After-tions; but I am always contented with my Opponent. "I call and summon him for my Witness; and his single "Evidence is instead of all others (c)." For he knew, that, if a rational Soul be moved by any thing, the Scale raust turn, whether it will or no (d). Show the governing Faculty of Reason a Contradiction, and it will renounce it: but, till you have shown it, rather blame yoursels, than him who is unconvinced.

3

⁽a) For that which I do, I allow not: for what I would, that do I not; but what I hate, that I do. Rom. vii. 15.

END of the Second Book.

⁽b) See B. I. c. 18. Note a.

⁽c) See c. 12. §. 2.

⁽d) Something here is left in the Original. The Translation hath connected the Sense in the best and shortest Manner it could.

THE

DISCOURSES

O F

EPICTETUS.

воок ш.

CHAPTER I.

Of Finery in Drefs.

Certain young Rhetorician coming to him, with his Hair too curiously ornamented, and his Dress very fine; Tell me, says EpiEtetus, whether you do not think some Horses and Dogs beautiful; and fo of all other Animals?

I do.

Are fome Men then likewife beautiful, and others deformed?

Certainly.

Book III. The Discourses of, &c. 223

Certainly.

Do we call each of these beautiful then in its Kind, on the same Account, or on some Account peculiar to itself? You will judge of it, by this: since we see a Dog naturally formed for one thing, a Horse for another, and a Nightingale, for Instance, for another; in general, it will not be absurd to pronounce each of them beautiful, so far as it is in the Condition most fuitable to its own Nature: but, since the Nature of each is different, I think each of them must be beautiful, in a different Way. Is it not so?

Agreed.

Then, what makes a Dog beautiful, makes a Horse deformed; and what makes a Horse beautiful, a Dog deformed; if their Natures are different.

So it feems probable.

For, I suppose, what makes a good Pancratiast (a) makes no good Wrestler, and a very ridiculous Racer; and the very same Person who appears beautiful as a Pentathlete (a), would appear very deformed, in Wrestling.

Very true.

What then, makes a Man beautiful? Is it the fame, in general, that makes a Dog or a Horse so?

The fame.

What is it then, that makes a Dog beautiful? That Excellency which belongs to a Dog.

⁽a) These are the Names of Combatants in the Olympic Games. A Pancratast was one who united the Exercises of Wrestling and Boxing. A Pentathlete, one who contended in all the Five Games of Leaping, Running, Throwing the Discus, Darting, and Wrestling. See Potter's Grecian Antiquities, Vol. I. ch. 21.

What, a Horse?

The Excellency of a Horfe.

What, a Man? Must it not be the Excellency belonging to a Man? If then you would appear beautiful, young Man, strive for human Excellency.

What is that?

Confider, when you praife, without partial Affection, whom you praife: Is it the Honeft, or the Dishoneft?

The Honest.

The Sober, or the Dissolute?

The Sober.
The Temperate, or the Intemperate?

The Temperate.

Then, if you make yourfelf fuch a Character, you know that you will make yourfelf beautiful: but, while you neglect these Things, though you use every Contrivance to appear beautiful, you must necessarily be deformed.

§ 2. I know not how to fay any thing further to you; for if I speak what I think, you will be vex'd, and perhaps go away, and return no more. And, if I do not speak, consider how I shall act: if you come to me to be improved, and I do not improve you; and you come to me as to a Philosopher, and I do not speak like a Philosopher. (b) Besides: how could it be consistent with my Duty towards yourself, to overlook, and leave you uncorrected? If hereafter you fhould come to have Sense, you will accuse me, with Reason: "What did Epictetus observe in me, that, when he saw me " come to him, in fuch a fhameful Condition, he overlooked " it, and never faid fo much as a Word of it? Did he fo " absolutely despair of me? Was not I young? Was not I " able to hear Reason? How many young Men, at that " Age, are guilty of many fuch Errors? I am told of " one Polemo, who, from a most dissolute Youth, became " totally changed (c). Suppose he did not think I should " become a Polemo; he might however have fet my Locks " to rights: he might have stript off my Bracelets and "Rings: he might have prevented my picking off the " Hairs, from my Person. But when he saw me dress'd " like a --- what shall I say? --- he was filent." I do not fay like what; when you come to your Senses, you will say it yourself, and will know what it is, and who they are who fludy fuch a Drefs.

⁽b) Epitieus had been before confidering the Propriety of his own Character as a Philosopher: but, according to Mr. Upton's very probable Conjecture, the Translation must be---would it not be cruel, &c.

§. 3. If you should hereafter lay this to my Charge, what Excuse could I make;——Ay: but if I do speak, he will not regard me. Why: did Laius regard Apollo? Did not he go and get drunk, and bid Farewel to the Oracle? What then? Did this hinder Apollo, from telling him the Truth? Now, I am uncertain, whether you will regard me, or not; but Apollo positively knew, that Laius would not regard him, and yet He spoke (a). "And why did he speak?" You may as well ask, Why is he Apollo; why doth he deliver Oracles; why hath he placed himself in such a Post as a Prophet, and the Fountain of Truth, to whom the Inhabitants of the World should refort? Why is KNOW THY-SELF inscribed on the Front of his Temple, when no one minds it?

⁽c) Polemo was a profligate young Rake of Athens, and even diffinguished by the Dissoluteness of his Manners. One Day, after a riocote Entertainment, he came reeling, with a Chaplet on his Head, into the School of Xenocrates. The Audience were greatly offended at his scandalous Appearance: but the Philosopher went on, without any Emotion, in a Discourse upon Temperance and Sobriety. Polemo was so struck by his Arguments, that he soon threw away his Chaplet; and, from that here, became a Disciple of Xenocrates; and profited so well by his Instructions, that he afterwards succeeded him in the Socratic School.

§. 4. Did Socrates prevail on all who came to him, to take care of themselves? Not on the thousandth Part: but however, being, as he himself declares, divinely appointed to such a Post, he never deserted it. What doth he say, even to his Judges? "If you would acquit me, on Condition, that I should no longer act as I do now, I will not accept it, nor desist: but I will accost all I meet, whether young or old, and interrogate them just in the same Manner: but particularly you, my Fellow-citizens; as you are more mearly related to me."——"Are you so curious and officious, Socrates? What is it to you, how we act?——"What do you say? While you are of the same Community, and the same Kindred, with me, shall you be careless " of yourfelf, and show yourfelf a bad Citizen to the City, a ⁽d) Laius, King of Thebes, petitioned Apollo for a Son. The Oracle answered him, That, if Lains became a Father, he should perish by the Hand of his Son. The Prediction was fulfilled by Oedipus. UPTON.

"bad

"bad Kinfman to your Kindred, and a bad Neighbour to "your Neighbourhood?"—Why, who are you?"—Here it is a great Thing to fay, "I am He who ought to take care "of Mankind;" for it is not every little paultry Heifer that dares refift the Lion: but if the Bull thould come up, and refift him, fay to bim, if you think proper, Who are you? "What Buffnefs is it of yours? In every Species, Man, there is forme one Part which by Nature excells; in Oten, in Dogs, in Bees, in Horfes. Do not fay to what excells, Who are you? If you do, it will, fome-how or other, find a Voice to tell you; "I am like the purple Thread in a Garment (e). Do not expect me to be like the reft; or find fault with my "Nature, which hath diffinguished me from others."

§. 5. What then, am I fuch a one? How should I? Indeed, are you such a one as to be able to hear the Truth? I wish you were. But however, fince I am condemned to wear a grey Beard and a Cloke, and you come to me as to a Philosopher, I will not treat you cruelly, nor as if I despaired of you; but will ask you—Whom is it, young Man, whom you would render beautiful? Know, first, who you are; and then adorn yourself accordingly. You are a Man; that is, a mortal Animal, capable of a rational Use of the Appearances of Things. And what is this rational Use? A perfect Conformity to Nature. What have you then, particularly excellent? Is it the animal Part? No. The mortal? No. That which is capable of the (f) Use of the Appearances of

(e) Sec P. 9. §. 3.

⁽f) The bare Uje of Objects belongs to all Animals; a rational Use of them is peculiar to Man. See Introduction, §. 7.

Things? No. The Excellence lies in the rational Part. Adorn and beautify this; but leave your Hair to Him who formed it, as he thought good. Well: what other Denominations have you? Are you a Man, or a Woman? A Man. Then adorn yourself as a Man, not a Woman. A Woman is naturally smooth and delicate; and, if hairy, is a Monster, and shown among the Monsters at Rome. It is the same in a Man, not to be hairy; and, if he is by Nature not so, he is a Monster. But, if he clips and picks off his Hairs, what shall we do with him? Where shall we show him; and how shall we advertise him? A Man to be seen, who would rather be a Woman. What a scandalous Show! Who would not wonder at such an Advertisement? I believe indeed, that these very Pickers themselves would; not apprehending, that it is the very Thing of which they are guilty.

§. 6. Of what have you to accuse your Nature, Sir? That it hath made you a Man? Why: were all to be born Women then? In that Case, what would have been the Use of your Finery? For whom would you have made your-self fine, if all were Women? But the whole Affair displeases you. Go to work upon the Whole then. Remove what is the Cause of these Hairs; and make yourself a Woman intirely, that we may be no longer deceived, nor you be half Man, half Woman. To whom would you be agreeable? To the Women? Be agreeable to them as a Man.

Ay: but they are pleafed with smooth pretty Fellows.

Go hang yourfelf. Suppose they were pleased with Pathics, would you become one? Is this your Business in Life?

Were you born to please dissolute Women? Shall we make such a one as you, in the Corinthian Republic, for Instance, Governor of the City, Master of the Youth, Commander of the Army, or Director of the public Games? Will you pick your Hairs, when you are married? For whom, and for what? Will you be the Father of Children; and introduce them into the State, picked, like yourself? O what, a sine Citizen, and Senator; and Orator! For Heaven's sake, Sir, ought we to pray for a Succession of young Men, disposed and bred like you!

§. 7. Now, when you have once heard this Discourse, go home, and say to yourself; It is not Epistetus who hath told me all these Things (for how should hee) but some propitious God, by him (g): for it would never have entered the Head of Epistetus, who is not used to dispute with any one. Well: let us obey God then, that we, may not incurr the divine Displeasure. If a Crow had signified any thing to you, by his Croaking; it is not the Crow that signifies it, but God, by him. And, if you have any thing signified to you by the human Voice, doth he not cause the Man to tell it you; that you may know the divine Efficacy, which declares its Significations to different Persons, in different Manners; and signifies the greatest and principal Things, by the noblest Messengers (b). What else doth the Poet mean, when he says,

Hermes

⁽g) For it is not ye that speak, but the Spirit of your Father which speaketh in you. Matt. x. 20.

⁽b) This Paffage hath a remarkable Likeness to Heb. i. 1, 2. God, Hermes I fent, bis Purpose to restrain.

Hermes, descending from Heaven, was to warn Him; and the Gods now, likewife, fend a Hermes to warn You, not to invert the well-appointed Order of Things; nor be curioully trifling: but fuffer a Man to be a Man; and a Woman, a Woman: a beautiful Man, to be beautiful, as a Man; a deformed Man, to be deformed, as a Man: for you do not confift of Flesh and Hair, but of the Faculty of Choice. If you take care to have this beautiful, you will be beautiful. But all this while, I dare not tell you, that you are deformed; for I fanfy you would rather hear any thing than this. But confider what Socrates favs to the most beautiful and blooming of all Men, Alcibiades. " Endeavour to make yourfelf " beautiful." What doth he mean to fay to himg. " Curl " your Looks, and pick the Hairs from your Legs?" Heaven forbid! But, Ornament your Choice: Throw away your wrong Principles.

What is to be done with the poor Body then?

Leave it to Nature. Another hath taken care of such Things. Give them up to Him.

What! then, must one be a Sloven?

By no means: but be neat, conformably to your Nature. A Man should be neat, as a Man; a Woman, as a Woman; a Child, as a Child. If not, let us pick out the Mane of a Lion, that he may not be slovenly; and the Comb of a who, at funding Times and in diverse Manners, spake in Times past unto the Fatters by the Prophets, bath, in these last Days, spoken unto us by bits Son----- Cock; for he ought to be neat too. Yes: but let it be as a Cock; and a Lion, as a Lion; and a Hound, as a Hound.

CHAPTERIL

In what a Proficient ought to be exercifed; and that we neglect the principal Things.

- §. 1. THERE are Three Topics in Philosophy, in which he, who would be wife and good, must be exercised (a). That of the Desires, and Aversions; that he may not be disappointed of the one, nor incurr the other. That of the Pursius, and Avoidances; and, in general, the Duties of Life; that he may act with Order and Consideration, and not carelessly. The Third Topic belongs to Circumspection, and a Freedom from Deception; and, in general, whatever belongs to the Afsent.
- §. 2. Of these Topics, the principal, and most urgent, is that of the Passions: for Passion is produced no otherwise, than by a Disappointment of the Desires, and an incurring of the Aversions. It is this which introduces Perturbations, Tumults, Missortunes, and Calamities: this is the Spring of Sorrow, Lamentation, and Envy: this renders us envious, and emulous; and incapable of hearing Reason.
- §. 3. The next Topic regards the Duties of Life. For I am not to be undiffurbed by Passions, in the same Sense as a

⁽a) See Introduction, §. 3, 4, 5, 6.

Statue is; but as one who preserves the natural and acquired Relations; as a pious Person, as a Son, as a Brother, as a Father, as a Citizen.

§. 4. The Third Topic belongs to those who are now making a Proficiency; and is a Security to the other Two, that no unexamined Appearance may furprize us, either in Sleep, or Wine, or in the Spleen. This, fay you, is above us. But our present Philosophers, leaving the First and Second Topics the Affections, and moral Duties, employ themselves wholly about the Third; Convertible, definitive, hypothetical Propositions [and other logical Subtilties]. For, they say, that we must, by engaging even in these Subjects, take care to guard against Deception. Who must? A wife and good Man. Is this Security from Deception, then, the Thing you want? Have you maftered the other Subjects? Are you not liable to be deceived by Money? When you fee a fine Girl, do you oppose the Appearance which is raised in your Mind? If your Neighbour inherits an Estate, do you feel no Vexation? Do you, at prefent, want nothing more than Perfeverance? You learn even these very Things, Wretch, with Trembling, and a folicitous Dread of Contempt; and are inquisitive to know, what is said of you: and, if any one comes and tells you, that, in a Dispute which was the best of the Philosophers, one of the Company faid, that fuch a one was the only Philosopher, that little Soul of yours grows to the Size of two Cubits, instead of an Inch: but if another should come, and fay, "You are mistaken, he is not " worth hearing; for what doth he know? He hath the " first Rudiments, but nothing more;" you are Thunderftruck:

struck; you presently turn pale; and cry out, "I will show "you him; what a Man, and how great a Philosopher "I am." It is evident [what you are], by these very Things: why do you aim to show it by others? Do not you know, that Diogenes showed some Sophist in this Manner, by extending his middle Finger (b); and, when he was mad with Rage, This, says Diogenes, is He: I have showed him to you. For a Man is not showed in the same Sense as a Stone; or a Piece of Wood, by the Finger; but whoever shows his Principles, shows him as a Man.

§. 5. Let us see your Principles too. For, is it not evident, that you confider your own Choice as nothing; but look out for fomething external, and independent on it? As, what fuch a one will fay of you, and what you shall be thought: whether a Man of Letters; whether to have read Chrysppus, or Antipater; for, if Archedemus too, you have every thing you wish. Why are you still solicitous, lest you should not show us what you are? Will you let me tell you, what you have showed us, that you are? A mean, discontented, passionate, cowardly Fellow; complaining of every thing; accusing every body; perpetually restless; good for nothing. This you have showed us. Go now and read Archedemus: and then, if you hear but the Noise of a Mouse, you are a dead Man; for you will die some such Kind of Death as----Who was it? Crinis (c); who valued himself extremely too, that he understood Archedemus.

(c) Crinis was a Stoic Philosopher. The Circumstances of his Death are not now known.

⁽b) Extending the middle Finger, with the Antients, was a Mark of the greatest Contempt.

234 The DISCOURSES of Book III.

§. 6. Wretch, why do not you let alone Things, that do not belong to you? Thee Things become fuch as are able to learn them, without Perturbation; who can fay, "I "am not fubject to Anger, or Grief, or Envy. I am not "reftrained; I am not compelled. What remains for me" to do? I am at Leifure; I am at Eafe. Let us fee how "convertible Propositions are to be treated: Let us confider, when an Hypothesis is laid down, how we may "avoid a Contradiction." To fuch Persons do these Things belong. They who are safe may light a Fire; go to Dinner, if they please; and sing, and dance: but you come and hoist a Flag, when your Vessel is just finking.

CHAPTER HI.

What is the Subject-matter of a good Man; and in what we chiefly ought to be Practitioners.

§. 1. THE Subject-matter of a wife and good Man is, his own governing Faculty. The Body is the Subject-matter of a Phyfician, and of a Mafter of Exercife; and a Field, of the Hufbandman. The Bufiness of a wife and good Man is, an Use of the Appearances of Things, conformable to Nature. Now, every Soul, as it is naturally formed for an Assente to Truth, a Diffent from Falshood, and a Suspence with regard to Uncertainty; so it is moved by a Desire of Good, an Aversion from Evil, and an Indifference to what is neither good nor evil. For, as a Money-changer, or a Gardener, is not at Liberty to reject Cassar's Coin; but when once it is shown, is obliged, whether he will or not, to deliver what is fold for it; so is it in the Soul. Apparent Good at first Sight attracts, and Evil repells. Nor will the Soul any more reject an evident Appearance of Good, than [they will] Cæ/ar's Coin.

§. 2. Hence depends every Movement, both of God and Man; and hence Good is preferred to every Obligation, however near. My Connexion is not with my Father; but with Good .--- Are you so hard-hearted ?--- Such is my Nature, and fuch is the Coin which God hath given me. If, therefore, Good is made to be any thing but Fair and Just, away go Father, and Brother, and Country, and every thing. What! Shall I overlook my own Good, and give it up to you? For what? " I am your Father." But not my Good. "I am your Brother." But not my Good. But, if we place it in a right Choice, Good will confift in an Observance of the feveral Relations of Life; and then, he who gives up fome Externals, acquires Good. Your Father deprives you of your Money; but he doth not hurt you. Your Brother will posfefs as much larger a Portion of Land than you, as he pleases; but will he possess more Honour? More Fidelity? More fraternal Affection? Who can throw you out of this Poffeffion? Not even Jupiter: for, indeed, it is not his Will; but he hath put this Good into my own Power, and given it me, like his own, uncompelled, unreftrained, and unhindered. But, when any one hath a Coin different from this, [for his Coin,] whoever shows it to him, may have whatever is fold for it, in return. A thievish Proconful comes into the Province: What Coin doth he use? Silver. Show it him, and carry off what you pleafe. An Adulterer comes: What Hh 2

What Coin doth he use? Women. Take the Coin, says one, and give me this Trifle. "Give it me, and it is yours." Another is addicted to Boys: give him the Coin, and take what you please. Another is fond of Hunting: give him a fine Nag, or a Puppy; and, though with Sighs and Groans, he will sell you for it, what you will; for he is inwardly compelled by another, who hath conflituted this Coin.

- §. 3. In this manner, ought every one chiefly to exercife himfelf. When you go out in a Morning, examine whomfoever you fee, or hear: answer, as to a Question. What have you feen? A handsome Person? Apply the Rule. Is this dependent, or independent, on Choice? Independent. Throw it away. What have you feen? One grieving for the Decease of a Child? Apply the Rule. Death is independent on Choice. Throw it by. Hath a Consul met you? Apply the Rule. What Kind of thing is the Consular Office? dependent, or independent, on Choice? Independent. Throw aside this too. It is not Proof. Cast it away. It is nothing to you.
- §. 4. If we acted thus, and practifed in this manner, from Morning till Night, by Heaven, fomething would be done. Whereas now, on the contrary, we are caught by every Appearance, half-afleep; and, if we ever do awake, it is only a little in the School: but, as foon as we go out, if we meet any one grieving, we fay, "He is undone." If a Conful, "How happy is He!" If an Exile, "How miferable." If a poor Man, "How wretched; he hath nothing to eat!"

- § 5. These vicious Principles then are to be lopped off: and here is our whole Strength to be applied. For what is Weeping and Groaning? Principle. What is Missortune? Principle. What is Sedition, Discord, Complaint, Accusation, Impiety, Trifling? All these are Principles, and nothing more; and Principles concerning Things independent on Choice, as if they were either good or evil. Let any one transfer these Principles to Things dependent on Choice, and I will engage, that he will preserve his Constancy, whatever be the State of Things about him.
- §. 6. The Soul refembles a Veffel filled with Water: the Appearances of Things refemble a Ray falling upon its Surface. If the Water is moved, the Ray will feem to be moved likewife, though it is in reality, without Motion Whenever therefore, any one is feized with a Swimming in his Head, it is not the Arts and Virtues that are confounded, but the Mind, in which they are: and, if this recover its Composure, so will they likewife.

CHAPTER IV.

Concerning one who exerted himself, with indecent Eagerness, in the Theatre.

§. 1. WHEN the Governor of Epirus had exerted himself indecently, in favour of a Comedian, and was, upon that Account, publicly railed at; and, when he came to hear it, was highly displeased with those who railed at him: Why: what Harm, says Epictetus, have these People done? They have favoured a Player; which is just what you did.

Is this a proper Manner then, of expressing their Favour? Seeing you, their Governor, and the Friend and Vice-gerent of Casar, express it thus, was it not to be expected, that they would express it thus too? For, if it is not right to express Favour, in this Manner, to a Player, be not guilty of it yourself; and, if it is, why are you angry at them, for imitating you? For whom have the Many to imitate, but you, their Superiors? From whom are they to take Example, when they come into the Theatre, but from you? "Do but look how Casar's Vicegerent sees the Play? Hath he cried out? I will cry out too. Hath he leaped up from his Seat? I too will leap up from mine. Do his Slaves fit in different Parts of the House, making an Uproar? I indeed have no Slaves; but I will make as much Uproar as I can myself, instead of ever so many."

§. 2. You ought to confider then, that when you appear in the Theatre, you appear as a Rule and Example to others, how they ought to fee the Play. Why is it, that they have railed at you? Becaufe every Man hates what hinders him. They would have one Actor crowned; you, another. They hindered you; and you, them. You proved the stronger. They have done what they could: they have railed at the Person who hindered them. What would you have then? Would you do as you please, and not have them even talk as they please? Where is the Wonder of all this? Doth not the Husbandman rail at Jupiter, when he is hindered by him? Doth not the Sailor? Do Men ever cease railing at Cassiar? What then, is Jupiter ignorant of this? Are not the Things that are said, reported to Cassar? How then doth he act? He knows, that, if he was to punish all Railers, he would have nobody left to command.

§. 3. When you enter the Theatre then, ought you to fay, "Come, let Sophron (a) be crowned?" No. But, "Come, let me preferve my Choice, in a Manner conformable with Nature, upon this Occafion. No one is dearer to me than "myfelf. It is ridiculous then, that, because another Man" gains the Victory as a Player, I should be hurt. Whom do I wish to gain the Victory? Him who doth gain it; and thus he will always be victorious, whom I wish to be for for.——But I would have Sophron crowned.——Why, celebrate as many Games as you will, at your own House; Nemean, Pythian, Ishmian, Olympic; and proclaim him Victor in all: but, in public, do not arrogate more than your Due, nor feize to yourself what lies in common; otherwise, bear to be railed at: for, if you act like the Mob, you reduce yourself to an Equality with them.

CHAPTER V.

- (b) Concerning those who pretend Sickness, as an Excuse to return home.
- §. x. I Am fick here, faid one of the Scholars. I will return home.

Were you never fick at home then? Confider, whether

⁽a) The Name of a Player. UPTON.

⁽b) The Greek Title to this Chapter is defective. Noτων feems to be the World wanting. Or, if Διαπλαττων fignifies, to pretend, as πλαττω doth, the true Reading of the Text may be, προς τους γουν διαπλαττομείνω.

you are doing any thing here, conducive to the Regulation of your Choice: for, if you make no Improvement, it was to no Purpose that you came. Go home. Take care of your domestic Affairs. For, if your ruling Faculty cannot be brought to a Conformity to Nature, your Land may. You may increase your Money, support the old Age of your Father, mix in the public Assemblies, and make a bad Governor, as you are a bad Man, and do other Things of that fort. But, if you are confcious to yourfelf, that you are cafting off fome of your wrong Principles, and taking up different ones in their room, and that you have transferred your Scheme of Life from Things not dependent on Choice, to those which are; and that, if you do sometimes cry alas, it is not upon the Account of your Father, or your Brother, but yourfelf; why do you any longer plead Sickness (c)? Do not you know, that both Sickness and Death must overtake us? At what Employment? The Husbandman, at his Plow; the Sailor, on his Voyage. At what Employment would you be taken? For, indeed, at what Employment ought you to be taken? If there is any better Employment, at which you can be taken, follow that. For my own Part, I would be taken engaged in nothing, but in the Care of my own Faculty of Choice; how to render it undiffurbed, unreftrained, uncompelled, free. I would be found fludying this, that I may be able to fay to God, "Have I transgress'd thy Commands? " Have I perverted the Powers, the Senses, the Pre-con-" ceptions, which thou haft given me? Have I ever accused "Thee, or cenfured Thy Difpensations? I have been fick, ⁽c) Εμε. Ετι, probably, should be, Εμε. Τι ετι.

" because it was Thy Pleasure; and so have others; but I " willingly. I have been poor, it being thy Will; but " with Joy. I have not been in Power; because it was not "thy Will; and Power I have never defired. Haft Thou " ever feen me out of Humour, upon this Account? Have I " not always approached Thee, with a cheerful Counte-" nance; prepared to execute Thy Commands, and the " Significations of Thy Will? Is it Thy Pleafure, that I " should depart from this Affembly? I depart. I give " Thee all Thanks, that Thou hast thought me worthy to " have a Share in it, with Thee; to behold Thy Works, and " to join with Thee, in comprehending Thy Administration." Let Death overtake me while I am thinking, while I am writing, while I am reading, fuch Things as thefe-

§. 2. But I shall not have my Mother, to hold my Head, when I am fick.

Get home then to your Mother; for you are fit to have your Head held, when you are fick.

But I used at home, to lie on a fine Couch.

Get to this Couch of yours; for you are fit to lie upon fuch a one, even in Health: fo do not lose the doing what you are qualified for. But what fays Socrates? " As one " Man rejoices in the Improvement of his Estate, another " of his Horse, so do I daily rejoice in apprehending myself " to grow better."

In what? In pretty Speeches?

Good Words, I intreat you.

In trifling Theorems? In what doth he employ himself? For For indeed I do not fee, that the Philosophers are employed, in any thing else.

Do you think it nothing, never to accuse or censure any one, either God or Man? Always to carry abroad, and bring home, the same Countenance? These were the Things which Socrates knew; and yet he never profes'd to know, or to teach any thing; but if any one wanted pretty Speeches, or little Theorems, he brought him to Protagoras, to Hippias: just as if any one had come for Pot-herbs, he would have taken him to a Gardener. Who of you then hath such an [earnest] Intention as this? If you had, you would bear Sickness, and Hunger, and Death, with Cheerfulness. If any of you hath been in Love, he knows that I speak Truth.

CHAPTER VI.

Miscellaneous.

§.1. WHEN he was asked, How (a) it came to pass, that, though the Art of Reasoning is more studied now, yet the Improvements were greater, formerly? In what Instance, answered he, is it more studied now; and in what were the Improvements greater, then? For in what is studied, at present, in that will be found likewise the Improvements, at present. The present Study is the Solution of Syllogism; and in this, Improvements are made. But formerly, the Study was to preserve the governing Faculty conformable to Nature; and Improvement was made in that.

⁽a) By changing των into ντως, and, as Mr. Upten proposes, ποτερων into προτερων, the whole Difficulty of this corrupted Passage is removed.

Therefore do not confound Things; nor when you study one, expect Improvement in another; but see whether any of us, who applies himself to think and act conformably to Nature, ever fails of Improvement. Depend upon it, you will not find one.

- §. 2. A good Man is invincible; for he doth not contend, where he is not superior. If you would have his Land, take it: take his Servants; take his public Post; take his Body. But you will never frustrate his Desire, nor make him incur his Aversion. He engages in no Combat, but what concerns the Objects of his own Choice. How can he fail then to be invincible?
- §. 3. Being asked, what common Sense was? he answered; As that may be called a common Ear, which diftinguishes only Sounds; but that, which diftinguishes Notes, an artificial one: so there are some Things, which Men, not totally perverted, discern by their common natural Powers; and such a Disposition is called common Sense.
- §. 4. It is not eafy to gain the Attention of effeminate young Men; for you cannot take Cuftard by a Hook: but the Ingenuous, even if you discourage them, are the more eager for Learning. Hence Rufus, for the most part, did discourage them; and made use of that, as a Criterion of the Ingenuous and Disingenuous. For he used to say, As a Stone, even if you throw it up, will, by its own Propensity, be carried downward; so an ingenuous Mind, the more it is sorced from its natural Bent, the more strongly will it incline towards it.

· C H A P-

CHAPTER VII.

Concerning a Governor of the Free States, who was an Epicurean.

§. 1. WHEN the Governor, who was an Epicurean, came to him; It is fit, fays he, that we ignorant People should enquire of you Philosophers, what is the most valuable Thing, in the World; as those who come into a strange City do of the Citizens, and such as are acquainted with it; that, after this Enquiry, we may go and take a View of it, as they do in Cities. Now, scarcely any one denies, but that there are three Things belonging to Man; Soul, Body, and Externals. It remains for you to answer which is the best. What shall we tell Mankind? Is it Flesh?

And was it for this, that Maximus took a Voyage in Winter as far as Cassiope, to accompany his Son? Was it to gratify the Flesh?

No, furely.

Is it not fit then, to employ our chief Study on what is best?

Yes, beyond all other Things.

What have we, then, better than Flesh?

The Soul.

Are we to prefer the Good of the Better, or of the Worfe? Of the Better.

Doth the Good of the Soul confift in what is dependent, or independent, on Choice?

In what is dependent on it.

Doth

Doth the Pleafure of the Soul then, depend on Choice? It doth.

And whence doth this Pleasure arise? From itself? This is unintelligible. For there must substit some principal-Effence of Good, in the Attainment of which, we shall enjoy this Pleasure of the Soul.

This too is granted.

19

In what then confifts this Pleasure of the Soul? For if it be in mental Objects, the Essence of Good is found (a). For it is impossible, that we should be reasonably elated with Pleafure, unless by Good; or that, if the leading Cause is not good, the Effect should be good. For, to make the Effect reasonable, the Cause must be good. But this, if you are in your Senses, you will not allow; for it would be tocontradict both Epicurus, and the rest of your Principles. It remains then, that the Pleasures of the Soul must consist in bodily Objects; and that there must be the leading Cause, and the Essence of Good. Maximus therefore did foolishly, if he took a Voyage for the Sake of any thing but Body; that is, for the Sake of what is best. He doth foolishly too, if. he refrains from what is another's, when he is a Judge, and able to take it. But let us confider only this, if you please, how it may be done fecretly, and fafely, and fo that no one may know it. For Epicurus himfelf doth not pronounce Stealing to be evil, only the being found out in it: and fays, " Do not steal;" for no other Reason, but because it is impossible to insure ourselves against a Discovery. But I say to you, That, if it be done dextroully and cautiously, we shall not be discovered. Besides: we have powerful Friends, of both Sexes, at Rome; and the Greeks are weak; and nobody will dare to go up to Rome, on fuch an Affair. Why do you refrain from your own proper Good? It is Madness; it is Folly. But if you were to tell me, that you do refrain, I would not believe you. For, as it is impossible to affent to an apparent Falshood, or to deny an apparent Truth, so it is impossible to abstain from an apparent Good. Now, Riches are a Good; and, indeed, the chief Instrument of Pleasures. Why do not you acquire them? And why do not we corrupt the Wife of our Neighbour, if it can be done fecretly? And, if the Hufband should happen to be impertinent, why not cut his Throat too? if you have a mind to be fuch a Philosopher as you ought to be, a complete one, to be confiftent with your own Principles. Otherwise you will not differ from us, who are called Stoics. For we too fay one Thing, and do another: we talk well, and act ill: but you will be perverse in a contrary Way; teach bad Principles, and act well.

⁽a) The Translation follows Lord Shaftesbury's Correction of $\psi_{Q,DEOS}$, for α_{Q} aloos; which feems absolutely necessary to the Sense of the Passage.

§ 2. For Heaven's fake represent to yourself a City of Epicureans (b). "I do not marry." "Nor I. For we are "not to marry, nor have Children; nor to engage in "public Affairs." What will be the Consequence of this? Whence are the Citizens to come? Who will educate them? Who will be the Governor of the Youth? Who, the Master of their Exercises? What then, will be teach them? Will it be what used to be taught at Athens, or Lacedemon? Take a young Man; bring him up, according to your Principles. These Principles are wicked; subversive of a State; pernicious to Families; nor becoming, even to Women. Give them up, Sir. You live in a capital City. You are to govern, and judge uprightly, and to refrain from what belongs to others. No one's Wife, or Child, or filver or gold Plate, is to have any Charms for you; but your own. Provide yourself with Principles, consonant to these Truths; and, setting out from thence, you will with Pleasure refrain from Things so persuasive to mislead, and get the better. But, if to their own persuasive Force, we add such a Philosophy, as hurries us upon them, and confirms us in them, what will be the Consequence?

⁽b) The Translation follows the Reading of Wolfius. Extrost.

§. 3. In a feulptured Vafe, which is the beft; the Silver, or the Workmanship? In the Hand, the Substance is Flesh: but its Operations are the principal Thing. Accordingly, the Duties, relative to it, are likewise threefold; some have respect to mere Existence; others, to the manner of Existence; and a third Sort are the leading Operations themselves. Thus likewise, do not set a Value on the Materials of Man, mere paultry Flesh; but on the principal Operations belonging to him.

What are these?

Engaging in public Bufines; Marrying; the Production of Children; the Worship of God; the Care of our Parents; and, in general, the having our Defires and Aversions, our Pursuits and Avoidances, such as each of them ought to be, conformable to our Nature.

What is our Nature?

To be free, noble fpirited, modest. (For what other Animal blushes?) What other hath the Idea of Shame?) But Pleasure must be subjected to these, as an Attendant and Handmaid, to call forth our Activity, and to keep us constant in natural Operations.

But I am rich, and want nothing.

Then why do you pretend to philosophize? Your gold and filver Plate is enough for you. What need have you of Principles?

Befides, I am Judge of the Greeks.

Do you know how to judge? Who hath imparted this Knowlege to you?

Cæsar hath given me a Commission.

Let him give you a Commission to judge of Music; and what Good will it do you? But how were you made a Judge? Whose Hand have you kissed? That of Symphorus, or Numenius (c)? Before whose Bed-chamber have you slept? To whom have you sent Presents? After all, do you perceive, that the Office of Judge is of the same Value as Numenius?

But I can throw whom I please into Prison.

As you may a Stone.

But I can beat whom I will too.

As you may an As. This is not a Government over Men. Govern us like reasonable Creatures. Show us what is for our Interest, and we will pursue it: show us what is against our Interest, and we will avoid it. Like Socrates, make us Imitators of yourself. He was properly a Governor of Men, who subjected their Desires and Aversions, their Pursuits, their Avoidances, to himself. "Do this; do "not do that, or I will throw you into Prison." Going thus far only, is not governing Men, like reasonable Creatures. But——"Do as Jupiter hath commanded, or you "will be punished. You will be a Loser."

⁽c) Of Symphorus and Numenius there is no Account; and their Names ferve only to show, that Persons once of such Power are now totally forgot.

What shall I lose?

Nothing more, than the not doing what you ought. You will lose your Fidelity, Honour, Decency. Look for no greater Losses, than these.

CHAPTER VIII.

How we are to exercife ourfelves, against the Appearances of Things.

§. r. In the fame manner, as we exercife ourfelves, against fophistical Questions, we should exercife ourfelves likewise, in relation to such Appearances, as every Day occur: for these too offer Questions to us.——Such a one's Son is dead. What do you think of it? Answer: it is independent on Choice: it is not an Evil.——Such a one is dissinherized by his Father. What do you think of it? It is independent on Choice: it is not an Evil.——Cassar hath condemned him.——This is independent on Choice: it is not an Evil.——This is dependent on Choice: it is an Evil.——He hath been afflicted by it.——This is dependent on Choice: it is a Good.

This is dependent on Choice: it is a Good.

The DISCOURSES of Book III.

- §. 2. If we accustom ourselves in this manner, we shall make an Improvement; for we shall never affent to any thing, but what the Appearance itself comprehends. A Son is dead.—Nothing more?—Nothing.—A Ship is lost.—What hath happened?—A Ship is lost.—What hath happened?—He is carried to Prison.—What hath happened?—He is carried to Prison. That he is unhappy, is an Addition, that every one makes of his own.—"But Jupiter doth not order these Things right."—Why so? Because He hath made you patient? Because He hath made them to be no Evils? Because it is permitted you, while you suffer them, to be happy? Because He hath opened you the Door, whenever they do not suit you? Go out, Man, and do not complain (a).
- §. 3. If you would know how the Romans treat Philosophers, hear. Italicus, efteemed one of the greatest Philosophers among them, being in a Passion with his own People, as if he had suffered some intolerable Evil, said once when I was by, "I cannot bear it; you are the Ruin of me; you "will make me just like bim;" pointing to me.

250

⁽a) It is plain, the Stoics could not deny, many of those Things to be very feverely painful, which they maintain to be no Evils; fince they so continually point at Self-murder as the Remedy. The lenient reviving Medicine, Future Hope, they knew nothing of; and their only Alternative, was an unscleding Contempt, or a blind Defineir. To feel tenderly the Loss of a Son, and yet with meek Piety support it, and give Thanks always, for all Things, and God, and the Pather, in humble Path of their earrhing together for our Good, was an Effort, beyond Stoictin to teach.

CHAPTER IX.

Concerning a certain Orator, who was going to Rome, on a Law Suit.

§. I. TATHEN a Person came to him, who was going to Rome, on a Law Suit, in which his Dignity. was concerned; and, after telling him the Occasion of his Journey, asked him, what he thought of the Affair? If you ask me, says Epictetus, what will happen to you at Rome, and whether you shall gain, or lose your Cause, I have no Theorem for this. But if you ask me, how you shall fare; I can answer, If you have right Principles, well; if wrong ones, ill. For Principle is to every one, the Cause of Action. For what is the Reason, that you so earnestly desired to be voted Governor of the Gnoffians? Principle. What is the Reason, that you are now going to Rome? Principle. And in Winter too; and with Danger, and Expence? Why: because it is necessary. What tells you so? Principle. If then, Principles are the Caufes of all our Actions, where-ever any one hath bad Principles, the Effect will be answerable to the Cause. Well then: are all our Principles sound? Are both yours, and your Antagonists? How then do you differ? Or are yours better than his? Why? You think so; and so doth he, that his are better; and fo do Madmen. This is a bad Criterion. But show me, that you have made some Examination, and taken fome Care of your Principles. As you now take a Voyage to Rome, for the Government of the Gnoffians, and are not contented to flay at home, with the Honours you before enjoyed, but defire fomething greater, Kk 2 and and more illustrious; did you ever take such a Voyage, in order to examine your own Principles; and to throw away the bad ones, if you happened to have any? Did you ever apply to any one, upon this Account? What Time did you ever fet yourself? What Age? Run over your Years. If you are alhamed of me, do it to yourself. Did you examine your Principles, when you were a Child? Did you not then do every thing, just as you do every thing, now? When you were a Youth, and frequented the Schools of the Orators, and made Declamations yourself, did you ever imagine, that you were deficient in any thing? And when you became a Man, and entered upon public Business, pleaded Causes, and acquired Credit, who, any longer, appeared to be equal to you? How would you have borne, that any one should examine, whether your Principles were bad? What, then, would you have me say to you?

Assist me, in this Assair.

I have no Theorem for that. Neither are you come to me, if it be upon that Account you came, as to a Philofopher; but as you would come to an Herb-feller, or a Shoemaker.

To what Purpofes then, have the Philosophers Theorems? For preserving and conducting the ruling Faculty conformably to Nature, whatever happens. Do you think this a small Thing?

No: but the greateft.

Well: and doth it require but a floort time? And may it be taken, as you pass by? If you can, take it then: and so you will say, "I have visited Epičtetus."———Ay: just as you would a Stone, or a Statue. For you have feen me, and nothing nothing more. But he vifits a Man, as a Man, who learns his Principles; and, in return, shows his own. Learn my Principles. Show me yours. Then fay, you have vifited me. Let us confute each other. If I have any bad Principle, take it away. If you have any, bring it forth. This is visiting a Philosopher. No. But " It lies in our Way; " and, while we are about hiring a Ship, we may call on " Epictetus. Let us fee what it is he fays." And then, when you are gone, you fay, " Epistetus is nothing. His " Language was inaccurate, was barbarous." For what else did you come to judge of? "Well: but if I employ (a) " myself in these Things, I shall be without an Estate, like " you; without Plate, without Equipage, like you."----Nothing perhaps is necessary to be said to this, but that I do not want them. But, if you possess many Things, you ftill want others: fo that, whether you will or not, you are poorer than I.

§. 2. What then do I want?

What you have not: Constancy; a Mind conformable to Nature; and a Freedom from Perturbation. Patron, or no Patron, what care I? But you do. I am richer than you. I am not anxious what Cassar will think of me. I statter no one, on that Account. This I have, instead of silver and gold Plate. You have your Vessels, of Gold; but your Discourse, your Principles, your Assents, your Pursuits, your Desires, of mere Earthen Ware. When I have all these conformable to Nature, why should not I bestow some ⁽a) The first ws I apprehend should be w, and is so translated.

The Discourses of Book III.

Study upon my Reasoning too? I am at leisure. My Mind is under no Distraction. In this Freedom from Distraction, what shall I do? Have I any thing more becoming a Man, than this? You, when you have nothing [to do], are restles; you go to the Theatre, or perhaps to bathe (b). Why should not the Philosopher polish his Reasoning? You have sine (c) crystal and myrrhine Vases; I have acute Forms of Reasoning. To you, all you have appears, little; to me, all I have, great. Your Appetite is unsatiable; mine is satisfied. When Children thrust their Hand into a narrow Jar of Nuts and Figs, if they fill it, they cannot get it out again; then they fall a crying. Drop a few of them, and you will get out the rest. And do you too drop your Desire: do not cover many Things, and you will get [some].

254

CHAPTER X.

In what Manner we ought to bear Sickness.

§. 1. WE should have all our Principles ready, to make use of, on every Occasion. At Dinner, such as relate to Dinner; in the Bath, such as relate to the Bath; and in the Bed, such as relate to the Bed.

⁽b) I can find no Sense of αταλυετε, which suits this Place. Perhaps the Reading should be π αρα λουτεθε; and it is so translated. Bathing was a common Aumsement of idle People. See B. III. c. 24. p. 495. of Mr. Upton's Edition.

⁽c) and how they quaff in Gold,
Crystal and myrrhine Cuts, imbosid with Gems.

Let not the stealing God of Sleep surprise,
Nor creep in Slumbers, on thy weary Eyes,
Ere every Action of the former Day
Strictly thou dost, and righteosly survey,
What have I done? In what have I transgres d?
What Good, or Ill, has this Day's Life express d?
Where have I fail'd, in what I ought to do?
If Evil were thy Deeds, repent and mourn,
If Good, rejoice ------

Rowe's Pythagoras.

We should retain these Verses, so as to apply them to our Use: not merely to repeat them aloud, as we do the Verses in Honour of Apollo, [without minding what we are about] (a).

§. 2. Again: In a Fever, we should have such Principles ready, as relate to a Fever; and not, as soon as we are taken ill, to lose and forget all. Provided I do but act like a Philosopher, let what will happen. Some Way or other depart I must, from this frail Body, whether a Fever comes, or not (b). What is it to be a Philosopher? Is it not to be prepared against Events? Do not you comprehend,

⁽a) This Place is either corrupt, as Mr. Upton thinks; or alludes to fome antient Cuftom not fufficiently underflood now.

⁽b) This is a corrupt Paffage, and the Translation conjectural. Perhaps the true Reading might be, πο ποτ απελθυτα το σουαντιο δει απελθείν με; and it is so translated. There is a timilar Turn of Expression, in the fifth Chapter of the second Book, which seems to savour this Notion. See Page 189. L. 1. of Mr. Upren's Edition.

that I fay, in Effect, if I am but prepared to Bear all Events with Calmoels, let what will happen, otherwise you are like a Pancratian, who, after receiving a Blow, mould gur the Combat. In that Case indeed you may allowably leave off, and not frun the Hazard of being whipt (c). But what shall we get by leaving off Philosophy? What then ought each of us to fay upon every difficult Occasion of the It was " for this, that I exercised! it was for this, that I prepared " myself." God says to you, Give me a Proof if you have gone through the preparatory Combats, according to Rule (d): if you have followed a proper Diet; a proper Exercise: if you have obeyed your Master; and, after this, do you faint, at the very Time of Action? Now is the proper Time for a Fever. Bear it well: for Thirst: bear it well: for Hunger; bear it well. Is it not in your Power? Who shall restrain you? A Physician may restrain you from drinking; but he cannot reftrain you from bearing your Thirst, well. He may restrain you from eating; but he cannot reftrain you from bearing Hunger, well .-- But I cannot follow my Studies .- -- And for what End do you follow them, Wretch? Is it not that you may be prosperous? That you may be conftant? That you may think and act conformably to Nature? What restrains you, but that in a ⁽c) Which was the Punithment of thofe, who prefented themfelves, as Candidates at the Ohmpic Games, and did not comply with the Rules, which were to be observed, upon that Occasion. Epidatus is here speaking of the preparatory Exercises, which lasted for Ten Months before the Combat.

⁽d) St. Paul hath made use of this very Expression, νομιμών αβλειν, 2 Tim. ii. 5.

Fever, you may preferve your ruling Faculty conformable to Nature? Here is the Proof of the Matter. Here is the Tryal of the Philosopher: for a Fever is a Part of Life, just as a Walk, a Voyage, or a Journey. Do you read, when you are walking? No: nor in a Fever. But when you walk well, you have every thing belonging to a Walker: so, if you bear a Fever well, you have every thing belonging to one in a Fever. What is it to bear a Fever well? Not to blame either God, or Man: not to be afflicted at what happens: to expect Death in a right and becoming Manner; and to do what is to be done. When the Physician enters, not to dread what he may fay; nor, if he should tell you, that you are in a fair Way, to be too much rejoiced: for what Good hath he told you? When you were in Health, what Good did it do you? Not to be dejected, when he tells you, that you are very ill: for what is it to be very ill? To be near the Separation of Soul and Body. What Harm is there in this, then? If you are not near it now, will you not be near it hereafter? What, will the World be quite overfet when you die? Why then, do you flatter your Phyfician? Why do you fay, " If you pleafe, Sir, I shall do " well (e)?" Why do you furnish an Occasion to his Pride? Why do not you treat a Physician, with regard to an infignishcant Body, which is not yours, but by Nature mortal, as you do a Shoemaker, about your Foot; or a Carpenter, about a House? These are the Things necessary, to one in a Fever. If he fulfils thefe, he hath what belongs to him. For it is not the Business of a Philosopher to take care of these mere Externals; of his Wine, his Oil, or his Body; but his ruling Faculty: And how, with regard to Externals? So as not to behave inconsiderately, about them. What Occasion then, is there for Fear? What Occasion for Anger (f), about what belongs to others, and what is of no Value? For, two Rules we should always have ready: That nothing is good or evil, but Choice: and, That we are not to lead Events, but to follow them. "My Brother ought not to have treated me "so." Very true; but so must see to that. However he treats me, I am to act right, with regard to him; for the one is my own Concern; the other is not: the one cannot be restrained; the other may.

⁽e) See Matth. viii. 2. Kugis, sar beans, suranai με καθαρίσαι. Upron.

CHAPTER XI.

Miscellaneous.

§ 1. HERE are fome Punishments appointed, as by a Law, for such as disobey the divine Administration. Whoever shall efteen any thing good, except what depends on Choice, let him envy, let him covet, let him flatter, let him be sull of Perturbation. Whoever esteems any thing essentially let him grieve, let him mourn, let him lament, let him be wretched.—And yet, though thus severely punished, we cannot desist.

⁽f) $\Phi_0 \mathcal{E}_{er}$, in the Greek, seems to have crept in from the preceding $\phi_0 \mathcal{E}_{ei\sigma} \theta_{ea}$: Therefore it is omitted in the Translation.

Remember what the Poet fays, of a Stranger.

A worse than Thou might enter here secure: No rude Affront shall drive him from my Door; For Strangers come from Jove----

HOMER.

§. 2. This too you should be prepared to say, with regard to a Father: It is not lawful for me to affront you, Father; even if a worse than you should have come: for all are from paternal Yove. And so of a Brother; for all are from kindred Yove. And thus we shall find Yove to be the Inspector of all the other Relations.

CHAPTER XII.

Of Ascetic Exercise.

§. 1. WE are not to carry our Exercises beyond Nature; nor merely to attract Admiration: for thus we, who call ourselves Philosophers, shall not differ from Jugglers. For it is difficult too, to walk upon a Rope; and not only difficult, but dangerous. Ought we too, for that Reason, to make it our Study to walk upon a Rope, or set up a Palm-Tree (a), or grasp a Statue (b)? By no means. It is not every thing

⁽a) A Tree remarkable for its being strait and high. I should imagine therefore, that to set up the Palm-Tree meant some Act of Dexterity, not unlike, perhaps, to that of our modern Ballance-masters: and that the Artist not only set up, but ascended to its Top, and there exhibited himself in various Attitudes. What confirms me in this Notion is, that these Palm-Tree Artists are joined with the Rope-dancers; their Professions being L12 alike thing difficult, or dangerous, that is a proper Exercise; but fuch Things as are conducive, to what lies before us to do.

And what is it that lies before us to do?

To have our Defires and Avertions free from Reftraint.

How is that?

Not to be disappointed of our Defire, nor incur our Averfion. To this ought our Exercise to be turned. For, without firong and constant Exercise, it is not possible to preserve our Defire undisappointed, and our Aversion unincurred; and therefore, if we suffer it to be externally employed on Things independent on Choice, be assured, that your Defire will neither gain its Object, nor your Aversion avoid it.

§. 2. And, because Habit hath a powerful Influence, and we are habituated to apply our Desire and, Ayerson to Externals only, we must oppose one Habit to another; and, where the Appearances are most slipperys, these oppose Exercise. I am inclinable to Pleasure. I will (c) bend myself beyond a due Proportion to the other Sides, for the sake of Exercise. I am averse to Pain. I will break and exercise the alike formed on the Difficulty and Danger. In Lucian's Treatife de Syria Dea, we meet with these Men, under the Name of the parameter reserves; who, it seems, were frequent in Arbbia and Syria; Countries where the Palm is known to flourish. See the new Edition of Lucian. Tom. III. p. 475. I am obliged for this Note to MY. HARKIN.

⁽b) Diagrass used, in Winter, to grass Statues, when they were covered with Snow, as an Exercise, to enure himself to Hardship, Diodents Larrius.

⁽ε) Αν ατυχησω is variously read. Perhaps the right Word may be ανατυχησω, derived from τοιχος; which fignifies, among other Things, the Appearances [which strike my Mind], that I may withdraw my Aversion, from every such Object. For who is the Practitioner in Exercise? He who endeavours totally to reftrain Defire, and to apply Aversion, only to Things dependent on Choice; and endeavours it most in the most difficult Cases. Hence different Persons are to be exercised. in different Ways. What fignifies it, to this Purpose, to set up a Palm Tree, or carry about a Tent (d) of Skins, or a Peftle and Mortar (d)? If you are hasty, Man, let it be your Exercise to bear ill Language patiently; and, when you are affronted, not to be angry. Thus, at length, you may arrive at fuch a Proficiency, as, when any one strikes you, to fay to yourfelf, " Let me suppose this, to be grasp-" ing a Statue." Next, exercise yourself to make a decent Use of Wine: not to drink a great deal; for even in this, there are forme to foolish as to exercise themselves: but at first to abstain from it; and to abstain from a Girl, and from Delicacies in Eating. Afterwards you will venture into the Lifts, at some proper Season, by way of Trial. if at all, to fee whether Appearances get the better of you, as much as they used to do. But at first, fly from what is the Side of a Ship, or Boat. It appears from Julius Pollux, and Phynics and Scot's Appendix, that arazogon is a Word ufed by the Vulgar, to fignify being fongistimes on one Side of the Veffel, and fometimes on the other; which agrees very well have: I will lean to the opposite Side, Sec. 1.5. to keep the Veffel even. I am obliged for this Note to a Friend.

⁽d) These Particulars are not now understood; but show, in general, that the ancient Philosophers had their about and othertations Austerities, and Mortifications, as well as the Monks, and Indian Philosophers since.

ftronger than you. The Contest of a fine Girl, with a young Man, just initiated into Philosophy, is unequal. The Brass Pot and the Earthen Pitcher, as the Fable says, are an unfuitable Match.

- §. 3. Next to the Defires and Aversions, is the Second Class, of the Pursuits and Avoidances; that they may be obedient to Reason; that nothing may done improperly in Point of Time or Place, or in any other Respect.
- §. 4. The Third Class relates to Assent, and what is plausible and persuastive. As Socrates said, that we are not to lead an unexamined Life; so neither are we to admit an unexamined Appearance; but to say, "Stop: let me see what you are, and whence you come." (As the Watch say, Show me the Ticket.) "Have you that Signal from "Nature, which is necessary to the Admission of every "Appearance?"
- §. 5. In short, whatever Things are applied to the Body, by those who exercise it, if they any way affect Desire or Aversion, they may be used in ascetic Exercise. But, if this be done for mere Ostentation, it belongs to one who looks out and hunts for something external, and seeks for Spectators to exclaim, "What a great Man!" Hence Apollonius said well. "If you have a mind to exercise yourself, so for your own Benefit, when you are choaking with Heat, take a little cold Water in your Mouth; and spirt it out again, and tell nobody."

CHAPTER XIII.

What Solitude is; and what a folitary Person.

8. 1. COLITUDE is the State of a helpless Person. For not he who is alone, is therefore folitary, any more than one in a Crowd, the contrary. When therefore we lofe a Son, or a Brother, or a Friend, on whom we have been used to repose, we often say, we are left solitary, even in the midst of Rome, where such a Crowd is continually meeting us; where we live among fo many, and when we have, perhaps, a numerous Train of Servants. For he is understood to be folitary, who is helpless and exposed to such as would injure him. Hence, in a Journey especially, we call outfelves folitary, when we fall among Thieves: for it is not the Sight of a Man that removes our Solitude, but of an bonest Man; a Man of Honour, and a helpful Companion. If merely being alone is fufficient for Solitude, Jupiter may be faid to be folitary at the Conflagration, and bewail himfelf, that he hath neither Juno, nor Pallas, nor Apollo, nor Brother, nor Son, nor Descendant, nor Relation. This, fome indeed fay, he doth, when he is alone at the Conflagration (a). Such as these, moved by some natural Principle, fome natural Defire of Society, and mutual Love, and by the Pleafure of Conversation, do not rightly consider the State of a Person who is alone. We ought, however, to be prepared in some manner for this also, to be felf-sufficient, and able to bear our own Company. For as Jupiter converses with himself, acquiesces in himself, and contemplates his own Administration, and is employed in Thoughts worthy of himfelf; fo should we too be able to talk with ourselves. and not to need the Conversation of others; nor be at a Loss [for Employment]: to attend to the divine Adminstration; to confider our Relation to other Beings; how we have formerly been affected by Events; how we are affected. now: what are the Things that still press upon us: how these too may be cured; how removed: if any thing wants completing, to complete it, according to Reason. You fee, that Cafar hath procured us a profound Peace: there are neither Wars, nor Battles, nor great Robberies, nor Piracies; but we may travel at all Hours, and fail from East to West. But can Cæsar procure us Peace from a Fever too? From a Shipwreck? From a Fire? From an Earthquake? From a Thunder Storm? Nay, even from Love? He cannot. From Grief? From Envy? No: not from any one of these. But the Doctrine of Philosophers promises to procure us Peace, from these too. And what doth it say? " If you " will attend to me, O Mortals, where-ever you are, and " whatever you are doing, you shall neither grieve, nor be " angry, nor be compelled, nor restrained: but you shall " live impassive, and free from all." Shall not he who enjoys this Peace, proclaimed, not by Cafar (for how should be have it to proclaim?) but by God, through Reason, be contented, when he is alone reflecting, and confidering; "To me there can now no Ill happen: there is no Thief, " no Earthquake. All is full of Peace, all full of Tran-" quility; every Road, every City, every Affembly. My " Neigh-

5

⁽a) The Stoics held, fucceffive Conflagrations at deflined Periods; in which all Beings were reforbed into the Deity.

" Neighbour, my Companion, unable to hurt me." Another, whole, Gare it is, provides you with Food, with Clothes, with Senfes wwith Pre-Conceptions. Whenever he doth not provide what is necessary, he founds a Retreat : He opens the Door, and fays to you; "Come:" Whither? To nothing dreadful to but to that, whence you were made; to what is friendly and apprigenialy to the Elements (b). What in you was Fire; goes away to Fire; what was Earth, to Earth; what Air, to Air; what Water, to Water. There is no Hades, nor Acheron, nor Cocyous, nor Pyriphlegethon; but all is full of Gods and Demons: He who can have fuch Thoughts; and can look upon the Sun, Moon, and Stars, and enjoy the Earth affd Sea, is no more folitary, than he is helpless .----Well: but fuppefer any one should come and murder me, when I am alone ----- Fool: not you; but that infignificant Body of yours

nomber of

§. 2.) What Solitude is there then left? What Deftitution? Why do we make ourfelves worse than Children? What do they do, when they are left alone? They take up Shells and Dust: they build House; then pull them down:

⁽b) What a melancholy Defeription of Death, and how gloomy the Ideas in this confidency Chapter! All Beings reduced to mere Elements, in fuceeffive Conflagrations! A noble Contraft to the Stoic Notions upon this Subject, may be produced from several Passages in the Scriptures.—
Then shall the Duff return to the Earth, as it was; and the Spirit shall return to God, who gove it. Eccles, Sit. 7. For, if we believe, that Josts dieds and rose again, even so them also, which sheep in Josus, will God bring with him. 1 Thest. iv. 14. See 76. vi. 39, 40. xi. 25, 26. 1 Cor. vi. 14. xv. cs. 2 Cor. v. 14. See.

then build fomething else: and thus never want Amusement. Suppose you were all to sail away; am I to fit, and cry, because I am left alone, and folitary? Am I so unprovided with Shells and Dust? But Children do this from Folly; and we are wretched from Wisdom.

§. 3. Every great Faculty is dangerous to a Beginner (c). Study first how to live like a Person in Sickness; that in time you may know how to live like one in Health. Abstain from Food. Drink Water. Totally repress your Defire, for some time, that you may at length use it according to Reason; and, if according to Reason, [as you may,] when you [come to] have fome Good in you, you will use it well. No: but we would live immediately as Men already wife; and be of Service to Mankind .---- Of what Service? What are you doing? Why: have you been of Service to yourself? But you would exhort them. You exhort! Would you be of Service to them, show them, by your own Example, what kind of Men Philosophy makes: and be not impertinent. When you eat, be of Service to those who eat with you; when you drink, to those who drink with you. Be of Service to them, by giving way to all, yielding to them, bearing with them; and not by throwing out your own ill Humour upon them.

⁽c) The Greek, from φερειν ων δει to φθισιχω, is fo corrupted, and unintelligible, that it is totally rejected. Indeed, the Connexion of this Paragraph with what precedes, is by no means clear.

Chap. 14. EPICTETUS.

CHAPTER XIV.

Miscellaneous.

- §. 1. A S bad Performers cannot fing alone, but in a Chorus; fo fome Perfons cannot walk alone. If you are any thing, walk alone; talk by yourfelf; and do not skulk in the Chorus. Think a little at last: look about you: fift yourfelf, that you may know what you are.
- § 2. If a Person drinks Water, or doth any thing else, for the sake of Exercise, upon every Occasion he tells all he meets; "I drink Water." Why: do you drink Water merely for the sake of drinking it? If it doth you any Good to drink it, drink it, if not, you act ridiculously. But, if it is for your Advantage, and you drink it, say nothing about it before those who are apt to take Offence. What then? These are the very People you wish to please.
- §. 3. Of Actions fome are performed on their own Account; others occasioned by Circumstances: some proceed from Motives of Prudence: some from Complassance to others; and some are done in pursuance of a Manner of Life, which we have taken up.
- §. 4. Two Things must be rooted out of Men; Conceit and Diffidence. Conceit lies in thinking you want nothing: and Diffidence, in supposing it impossible, that, under such adverse Circumstances, you should ever succeed. Now, Conceit is removed by Consutation: and of this Socrates was the Author. And [in order to fee] that the Undertaking is not impracticable, confider and enquire. The Enquiry itself will do you no Harm: and it is almost being a Philosopher, to enquire, How it is possible to make use of our Desire and Aversion, without Hindrance.

§ 5. I am better than you; for my Father hath been Conful. I have been a Tribune, fays another, and not you. If we were Horfes, would you fay, My Father was fwifter than yours? I have Abundance of Oats and Hay, and fine Trappings? What now, if, while you were faying this, I fhould answer; "Be it so. Let us run a Race then." Is there nothing in Man analogous to a Race in Horses, by which it may be known, which is better or worse? Is there not Honour, Fidelity, Justice? Show yourself the better in these; that you may be the better, as a Man. But if you tell me, you can kick violently; I will tell you again, that you value yourself on the Property of an Ass.

CHAPTER XV.

That every Thing is to be undertaken with Circumspection.

§. r. (a) In every Affair confider what precedes and follows; and then undertake it. Otherwife you will begin with Spirit; but, not having thought of the Confequences,

This Chapter hath a great Conformity to Luke xiv. 28. &c. But it is ⁽a) This XVth Chapter makes the XXIXth of the Enchiridion; but with some Varieties of Reading. Particularly, for εν τω αγωνι παρορυσσευθαι here, is αι τον αγωνα παρερχευθαι there.

fequences, when fome of them appear, you will shamefully " I would conquer at the Olympic Games." But confider what precedes and follows, and then, if it be for your Advantage, engage in the Affair. You must conform to Rules; fubmit to a Diet; refrain from Dainties; exercise your Body, whether you chuse it or not, at a flated Hour, in Heat and Cold: you must drink no cold Water; nor, fometimes, even Wine (b). In a word, you must give yourfelf up to your Master, as to a Physician. Then, in the Combat, you may be thrown into a Ditch, diflocate your Arm, turn your Ankle, fwallow Abundance of Duft, be whipt (c); and, after all, lofe the Victory. When you have reckoned up all this, if your Inclination still holds, fet about the Combat. Otherwife, take notice, you will behave like Children, who fometimes play Wreftlers, fometimes Gladiators; fometimes blow a Trumpet, and fometimes act a Tragedy; when they happen to have feen and admired these Shows. Thus you too will be, at one Time, a Wrestler; at another, a Gladiator; now, a Philosopher; then, an Orator: but, with your whole Soul, nothing at all. Like an Ape, you mimic All you fee; and one thing after another is fure to please you; but is out of favour, as soon as it becomes familiar. For you have never entered upon to be observed, that Epistens, both here, and elsewhere, supposes some Persons incapable of being Philosophers; that is, virtuous and pious Men: but Christianity requires and enables all, to be such.

⁽b) St. Paul hath a fimilar Allufion to the public Games. 1 Cov. ix. 25... Both Writers have them frequently in view.

⁽c) Which was the Case, in any Violation of the Laws of the Games.

any thing confiderately, nor after having viewed the whole Matter on all Sides, or made any Scrutiny into it; but rashly, and with a cold Inclination. Thus some, when they have feen a Philosopher, and heard a Man speaking like Euphrates (d), (though, indeed, who can speak like him,) have a Mind to be Philosophers too. Confider first, Man. what the Matter is, and what your own Nature is able to bear. If you would be a Wrestler, consider your Shoulders, your Back, your Thighs: for different Perfons are made for different Things. Do you think, that you can act as you do, and be a Philosopher? That you can eat (e), and drink, and be angry, and discontented, as you are now? You must watch; you must labour; you must get the better of certain Appetites: must quit your Acquaintance; be despised by your Servant; be laughed at by those you meet: come off worse than others, in every thing; in Magistracies; in Honours; in Courts of Judicature. When you have confidered all these Things round, approach, if you please: if, by parting with them, you have a Mind to purchase Apathy, Freedom, and Tranquillity. If not, do not come hither: do not, like Children, be one while a Philosopher, then a Publican, then an Orator, and then one of Cafar's Officers. These Things are not consistent. You must be One Man, either good or bad. You must cultivate either your own ⁽d) The Translation doth not follow the Pointing of Mr. Upton's Edition in this Place.

Euphrates was a Philosopher of Syria, whose Character is described, with the highest Encomiums, by Phny. See L. I. Ep. x.

⁽e) Taura in this Place should be Taura.

ruling Faculty, or Externals; and apply yourfelf either to Things within or without you; that is, be either a Philo-fopher, or one of the Vulgar (f).

CHAPTER XVI.

That Caution is necessary in Condescension and Complaisance.

§. 1. E who frequently converses with others, either in Discourse, or Entertainments, or in any familiar Way of Living, must necessarily either become like his Companions, or bring them over to his own Way. For, if a dead Coal be applied to a live one, either the first will quench the last, or the last kindle the first. Since then, the Danger is fo great, Caution must be used in entering into these Familiarities with the Vulgar; remembering, that it is impossible to touch a Chimney-Sweeper, without being Partaker of his Soot. For what will you do, if you are to talk of Gladiators, of Horses, of Wrestlers, and what is worse, of Men? "Such a one is good; another, bad: this was well, " that ill done." Befides: what if any one should sneer, or ridicule, or be ill-natured? Is any of you prepared, like a Harper; who, when he takes his Harp, and tries the Strings, finds out which Notes are discordant, and knows how to put the Instrument in Tune? Hath any of you such a Faculty as Socrates had; who, in every Conversation, could bring his Companions to his own Purpose? Whence should you have it? You must therefore be carried along by the Vulgar. And why are they more powerful than you? Because they utter their corrupt Discourses, from Principle, and you your good ones, only from your Lips. Hence they are without Strength, or Life; and it would turn one's Stomach to hear your Exhortations, and poor miserable Virtue, celebrated up-hill and down. Thus it is, that the Vulgar get the better of you: for Principle is always strong, always invincible. Therefore, before these good Opinions are fixed in you, and you have acquired fome Faculty for your Security, I advise you to be cautious, in your Familiarity with the-Vulgar: otherwife, if you have any Impressions made on you in the Schools, they will melt away daily, like Wax before the Sun. Get away then, far from the Sun, while you have these waxen Opinions.

^(/) What is omitted at the End of this Chapter, is placed at the End of the XVIIth', to which Lord Shafteflury thinks it belongs, or to one of the mifcellaneous Chapters; which is the more probable Opinion.

§. 2. It is for this Reason, that the Philosophers advise us to leave our Country; because inveterate Manners draw the Mind asside, and prevent the Beginning of a new Habit. We cannot bear those, who meet us, to say, "Hey-day! such a one is turned Philosopher; who was so and so." Thus Physicians send Patients, with lingering Distempers, to another Place, and another Air: and they do right. Do you too import other Manners, instead of those you carry out. Fix your Opinions, and exercise yourselves in them. No: but from hence to the Theatre, to the Gladiators, to the Walks, to the Circus; then hither again; then back again; just the same Persons all the while. No good Habit, no Attention, no Animadversion, upon ourselves. No Observation what Use we make of the Appearances prefented to our Minds; whether it be conformable, or contrary, to Nature; whether we answer them right, or wrong; (a) whether we say to Things independent on Choice, "You are nothing to me." If this be not (b) yet your Case, fly from your former Habits: fly from the Vulgar, if you would ever begin to be any thing.

CHAPTER XVII.

Of Providence.

§. I. WHENEVER you lay any thing to the Charge of Providence, do but reflect; and you will find, that it hath happened agreeably to Reason.

Well: but a dishonest Man hath the Advantage.

In what?

In Money.

Why: he is better [qualified] for it (c) than you: because he flatters, he throws away Shame, he keeps awake: and where is the Wonder? But look whether he hath the Advantage of you in Fidelity, or in Honour. You will find he hath

 ⁽a) The Translation follows Mr. Upion's Conjecture, Sei. Ει επίλεγω, &c.

⁽b) Mηπω, Mr. Upton's Manuscript.

⁽c) " But fometimes Virtue flarves, while Vice is fed." What then? Is the Reward of Virtue, Bread?

That, Vice may merit; 'tis the Price of Toil:

The Knave deserves it, when he tills the Soil; The Knave deserves it, when he tempts the Main.

Effay on Man, L. IV.

not: but, that where-ever it is best for you to have the Advantage of him, there you have it. I once said to one who was full of Indignation, at the good Fortune of Philo-florgus, "Why: would you be willing to sleep with "Sura (a)?" Heaven forbid, said he, that Day should ever come!——Why then are you angry, that he is paid for what he sells: or how can you call him happy, in Possession acquired by Means, which you detest? Or what Haridoth Providence do, in giving the best Things to the best Men? Is it not better to have a Sense of Honour, than to be rich?——Granted.——Why then are you angry, Man, if you have what is best? Always remember then, and have it ready, That a better Man hath the Advantage of a worse, in that Instance, in which he is better; and you will never have any Indignation.

But my Wife treats me ill.

Well: if you are asked, what is the Matter: answer; " My Wife treats me ill."

Nothing more?

Nothing.

My Father gives me nothing.—What is the Matter?—My Father gives me nothing. To denominate this an Evil, fome external and falfe Addition must be made. We are not therefore to get rid of Poverty; but of our Principle concerning it; and we shall do well.

⁽d) This Perfon is not known. One of his Name is mentioned in the AdS of Ignatius, as being Conful at the Time, when He suffered Martyrdom.

When Galba was killed, fomebody faid to Rufus, "Now, "indeed, the World is governed by Providence." I never thought, answered Rufus, of bringing the flighteft Proof, that the World was governed by Providence, from Galba.

CHAPTER XVIII.

That we ought not to be alarmed, by any News that is brought us.

§. 1. TYTHEN any alarming News is brought you, always have it at hand, that no News can be brought you, concerning what is in your own Choice. Can any one bring you News, that your Opinions or Defires are ill conducted? By no means: but that fomebody is dead. What is that to you then? That fomebody speaks ill of you. And what is that to you then? That your Father is forming some Contrivance, or other. Against what? Against your Choice? How can he? Well: but againft your Body; againft your Estate? You are very safe: this is not against you .--- But the Judge [perhaps] hath pronounced you guilty of Impiety. And did not the Judges pronounce the fame of Socrates? Is his pronouncing a Sentence, any Bufiness of yours? No. Then why'do you, any longer, trouble yourfelf about it? There is a Duty incumbent on your Father; which, unless he performs, he loses the Character of a Father, of natural Affection, of Tenderness. Do not want him to lose any thing elfe, by this: for no Perfon is ever guilty in one Inflance, and a Sufferer in another. Your Duty, on the other hand, is to make your Defence, with Conftancy, Modefty, and Mildness: otherwise you lose the Character of Nn 2 filial filial Piety; of Modefty, and Generofity of Mind. Well: and is your Judge free from Danger? No. He runs an equal Hazard. Why then, are you fill afraid of his Decision? What have you to do with the Evil of another? Making a bad Defence would be your own Evil. Let it be your only Care to avoid that: but whether Sentence is passed on you, or not, as it is the Business, so it is the Evil, of another. "Such a one threatens you."—Me? No.—"He censures you."—Let him look to it, how he doth his own Business.—"He will give an unjust Sentence against you.—Poor Wretch!

CHAPTER XIX.

What is the Condition of the Vulgar; and what of a Philosopher.

§.1. HE first Difference between one of the Vulgar, and a Philosopher, is this: the one says, I am undone, on the Account of my Child, my Brother, my Eather: but the other, if ever he be obliged to say, I am undone I resseas, and adds, on Account of myself. For Choice cannot be restrained, or hurt, by any thing to which Choice doth not extend; but only by itself. If therefore we always would incline this Way, and, whenever we are unsuccessful, would lay the Fault on ourselves, and remember, that there is no Cause of Perturbation and Inconstancy, but Principle, I engage we should make some Proficiency. But we set out in a very different Way, from the very Beginning. In Insancy, for Example, if we happen to stumble, our Nurse doth not chide us, but beats the Stone. Why: what Harm hath the Stone done? Was it to move out of its Place, for the Folly of your Child? Again: if we do not find something to eat, when we come out of the Bath, our Governor doth not try to moderate our Appetite, but beats the Cook. Why: did we appoint you Governor of the Cook, Man? No: but of our Child. It is he whom you are to correct and improve. By these Means, even when we are grown up, we appear Children. For an unmusical Perfon is a Child in Music; an illiterate Person, a Child in Learning; and an untaught one, a Child in Life.

CHAPTER XX.

That some Advantage may be gained, from every external Circumstance.

§. 1. In Appearances that are merely Objects of Contemplation, almost all Persons have allowed Good and Evil to be in ourselves, and not in Externals. No one says, it is good, to be Day; evil, to be Night; and the greatest Evil, that Three should be Four: but what? That Knowlege is good, and Error evil. So that, concerning Falshood itself, there exists one (a) good Thing; the Knowlege, that it is Falshood. Thus then should it be, in Life also. Health is a Good; Sickness, an Evil. No, Sir. But what? A right Use of Health is a Good; a wrong one, an Evil. So that, in truth, it is possible to be a Gainer, even by Sickness. And is it not possible, by Death too? By Mutilation? Do you think (b) Menæceus an inconfiderable Gainer by Death? --- "May whoever talks thus, be fuch a Gainer as he was!" ----Why: pray, Sir, did not he preserve his Patriotism, his Magnanimity, his Fidelity, his gallant Spirit? And, if he had lived on, would he not have loft all thefe? Would not Cowardice, Meanspiritedness, and Hatred of his Country, and a wretched Love of Life, have been his Portion? Well, now: do not you think him a confiderable Gainer, by dying? No: but I warrant you, (c) the Father of Admetus was a great Gainer, by living on, in fo meanspirited and wretched a Way, as he did! Why: did not he die at last? For Heaven's sake. cease to be thus struck, by the mere Materials, [of Action.] Cease to make yourselves Slaves; first of Things, and then, upon their Account; of the Men who have the Power, either to bestow, or take them away. Is there any Advantage then to be gained from these Men? From all; even from a Reviler. What Advantage doth a Wrestler gain from him, with whom he exercises himself, before the Combat? The greatest. Why: just in the same manner I exercise myself with this Man. (d) He exercises me in Patience, in Gentleness, in Meekness. No: but, I suppose, I gain an Advantage from him who manages my Neck, and fets my ⁽b) The Son of Creen, who killed himfelf, after he had been informed, by an Oracle, that his Death would procure a Victory to the Thebans, APOLLODORUS. UPTON.

⁽a) The Paffage, as it now flands in the Greek, is fearcely intelligible. The Difficulty is removed, by reading αγαθον for απατην, and the Translation follows this Conjecture.

⁽c) Sec P. 202. Note a.

⁽d) 'Outos for 'outws. Wolfius.

Back and Shoulders in order; and the best Thing a Master of Exercise can say, is, " Lift him up with both Hands," and the heavier he is, the greater is my Advantage: and yet, it is no Advantage to me, when I am exercised in Gentleness of Temper! This is not knowing, how to gain an Advantage from Men. Is my Neighbour a bad one? He is fo, to himfelf; but a good one, to me. He exercises my good Temper, my Moderation. Is my Father bad? To himself; but not to me. " This is the Rod of Hermes. " Touch with it whatever you pleafe, and it will become "Gold." No: but bring whatever you please, and I will turn it into Good. Bring Sickness, Death, Want, Reproach, capital Trial. All thefe, by the Rod of Hermes, shall turn to Advantage .---- "What will you make of Death?"-----Why: what but an Ornament to you; what but a Means of your showing, by (e) Action, what the Man is, who knows, and follows the Will of Nature .--- " What will you make " of Sickness?" ---- I will show its Nature. I will make a good Figure in it; I will be composed and happy. I will not flatter my Physician. I will not wish to die. What need you ask further? Whatever you give me, I will make it happy, fortunate, respectable, and eligible. No .--- "But, " take care not to be fick." Just as if one should fay, " Take care, that the Appearance of Three being Four, doth " not present itself to you." " It is an Evil." How an Evil, Man? If I think as I ought about it, what Hurt will it any longer do me? Will it not rather be even an Advantage to me? If then I think as I ought, of Poverty, of Sickness, of being out of Power, is not that enough for me? Why then must I any longer seek Good or Evil, in Externals? But what is the State of the Case? These Things are allowed here; but nobody carries them home; but immediately every one is in a State of War with his Servant, his Neighbours, with those who sneer and ridicule him. Well fare (f) Lesting, for proving every Day, that I know nothing.

⁽e) For Saign of eppe, Saigns ergo feems the true Reading.

CHAPTER XXI.

Concerning those who readily set up for Sophists.

Fig. 1. (a) THEY who have received bare Propositions, are prefently inclined to throw them up, as a sick Stomach doth its Food. First concoct it, and then you will not throw it up; otherwise it will be crude and impure, and unfit for Nourishment. But show us, from what you have digested, some Change in your ruling Faculty; as Wrettlers do in their Shoulders, from their Exercise, and their Diet: as Artificers, in their Skill, from what they have learnt. A Carpenter doth not come and say, "Hear me discourse to be inlarged upon, though taken from the Practice of the Greek and ⁽f) Mr. Upton conjectures this Lefbius to have been some Buffoon.

⁽a) The Translation follows the Conjecture of Wolfius, ακαθαρτον. There are other Difficulties in the Text, as it now stands. Εξειμεσης, perhaps, should be εξειμεσης; or, probably, there should be no μπ before εξειμασης; and then the Meaning of Epitletus will be, That the Persons whom he is speaking of, ought first to concod Propositions for their own Uic, and then throw them up (i. e. utter them in Discourse), for the Use of others. But the Figure he makes use of is so dirry, that it is not " on the Art of Building:" but he hires a House, and fits it up, and shows himself Master of his Trade. Let it be your Business likewise to do something like this: eat like a Man; drink, dress, marry, have Children, perform the Duty of a Citizen; bear Reproach; bear with an unreasonable Brother; bear with a Father; bear with a Son, a Neighbour, a Companion; as becomes a Man. Show us these Things, that we may fee that you have really learnt fomewhat, from the Philoforhers. No: "But come and hear me repeat Commenta-Get you gone, and feek fomebody elfe, to throw them out upon. " Nay, but I will explain the Doctrines of " Chrysppus to you, so as no other Person can: I will eluci-" date his Diction, in the clearest Manner." And is it for this then, that young Men leave their Country, and their own Parents, that they come and hear you explain Words? Ought they not to return patient, active, free from Passion, free from Perturbation; furnished with such a Provision for Life, that, fetting-out with it, they will be able to bear all Events well, and derive Ornament from them? But how should you impart what you have not? For have you yourfelf done any thing elfe, from the Beginning, but fpent your Time in folving Syllogifms, and convertible Propositions, and interrogatory Arguments .---- But fuch a one hath a School, and why should not I have one?"----Wretch, these Things are not effected, in a careless and fortuitous Manner. But there must be Age, and a Method of Life, and a guiding God. Is it not fo? No one quits the Port, or fets fail, till he hath facrificed to the Gods, and implored their Affiftance: nor do Men fow, without first invoking Ceres. And shall any one who hath undertaken fo great a Work, undertake it fafely, without the Gods? And shall they, who apply to such a one, apply to him with Success? What are you doing else, Man, but divulging the Mysteries? And you say, "There " is a Temple at Eleufis; and here is one too. There is a " (b) Priest; and I will make a Priest here: there is a "Herald; and I will appoint a Herald too: there is a " Torch-bearer; and I will have a Torch-bearer: there are " Torches; and fo shall there be here. The Words faid, " the Things done, are the fame. Where is the Difference " betwixt one and the other?" Most impious Man! is there no Difference? Are these Things of Use out of Place. and out of Time? A Man should come with Sacrifices and Prayers, previously purified, and his Mind affected with a Senfe, that he is approaching to facred and ancient Rites. Thus the Mysteries become useful: thus we come to have an Idea, that all these Things were appointed by the Ancients, for the Instruction and Correction of Life. But you divulge and publish them, without Regard to Time and Place; without Sacrifices, without Purity: you have not the Garment that is necessary for a Priest, nor the Hair, or the Girdle (c), that is necessary; nor the Voice, nor the Age: nor have you purified yourfelf, like him. But, when you have got the Words by Heart, you fay "The Words are facred of themfelves." These Things are to be approached, in another Manner. It is a great, it is a myflical Affair; not given by Chance, or to every one indifferently. Nay, mere Wisdom, perhaps, is not a fufficient Qualification for the Care of Youth. There ought to be likewife a certain Readiness and Aptitude for this, and indeed a particular Constitution of Body; and, above all, a Counfel from God to undertake this Office, as he counfelled Socrates to undertake the Office of Confutation; Diogenes, that of authoritative Reproof; Zeno, that of dogmatical Instruction. But you set up for a Phyfician, provided with nothing but Medicines, and without knowing, or having studied, where, or how, they are to be applied. "Why: fuch a one had Medicines for the Eyes; " and I have the fame." Have you then, a Faculty too of making use of them? Do you, at all, know when, and how, and to whom, they will be of Service? Why then do you act at Hazard? Why are you careless, in Things of the greatest Importance? Why do you attempt a Matter unfuitable to you? Leave it to those who can perform it, and do it Honour. Do not you too bring a Scandal upon Philosophy, by your Means; nor be one of those, who cause the Thing itself to be calumniated. But, if Theorems delight you, sit quiet, and turn them every Way by yourfelf; but never call yourfelf a Philosopher; nor fusfer another to call you so; but fay, " He is miftaken: for my Defires are not different " from what they were; nor my Purfuits directed to other " Objects; nor my Affent otherwise given; nor have I at " all made any Change in the Use of the Appearances, from " my former Condition." Think and fpeak thus of yourfelf, if you would think as you ought: if not, act at all Hazards, and do as you do; for it becomes you.

⁽²⁾ The Prieft who prefided over the Elenghian Mysteries was called literoploantes; i. e. a Revealer of facred Things. He was obliged to devote himself to divine Service, and lead a chafte and fingle Life. He was attended by three Officers; a Torch-bearer, a Herald, and One who affilted at the Altar. For a fuller Account of the Elenghian Mysteries, fee Potters's Greeian Antiquities, Vol. I. c. 20.

⁽c) The Girdle is mentioned among the holy Garments of the Levitical Priefts. Exod. xxviii. 4. 39, 40. &c.

CHAPTER XXII.

Of the Cynic Philosophy (a).

§. 1. WHEN one of his Scholars, who feemed inclined to the Cynic Philosophy, asked him, what a Cynic must be, and what was the general Plan of that Sect? Let us examine it, says he, at our Leisure. But thus much I can tell you now, that he who (b) attempts so great an Affair without God, is an Object of divine Wrath, and would only bring public Dishonour upon himself. For, in a well regulated House, no one comes, and says to himself, "I wought to be the Manager here." If he doth, and the

⁽a) The Cynics owed their Original to Antifthenes, a Disciple of Socrates. They held Virtue to be the highest Good, and the End of Life: and treated Riches, Honours, and Power, with great Contempt. They were Enemies to Science, and polite Literature; and applied themfelves wholly to the Study of Morality. There was, in many Respects, great Conformity between them and the Stoics: But the Stoics felected what feemed laudable, in their Principles, without imitating the Roughness of their Address, and the detestable Indecency of their external Behaviour. The Stoics were indeed a reformed Branch of the Cynics, and thence, perhaps, fpoke of them fomewhat more favourably, than they might otherwise have done. The Cynics are said to have derived their Name from Cynolarges, a Gymnasium, without the Walls of Athens, where Antifibenes taught; and which was fo called from the Accident of a white Dog stealing Part of a Victim, which Diomus was facrificing to Hercules: and their barking at every body, and their Want of Shame, helped to confirm the Appellation. In this Cynofarges was a celebrated Temple of Hercules; which, very possibly, gave the Cynics the original Hint of comparing themselves to that Hero; which they so much affected.

⁽b) And no Man taketh this Honour unto himfelf, but be that is called of God.——Heb. v. 4.

Mafter (c) returns, and fees him infolently giving Orders, he drags him out, and hath him whipt. Such is the Case likewife in this great City of the World. For here too is a Mafter of the Family, who orders every thing. " You are " the Sun: you can, by making a Circuit, form the Year, " and the Seafons, and increase and nourish the Fruits; raise " and calm the Winds, and give a moderate Warmth to the " Bodies of Men. Go: make your Circuit, and thus intimately " move every thing, from the greatest to the least. You are a " Calf: when the Lion appears, do your (d) Part, or you " will fuffer for it. You are a Bull: come and fight; " for that is incumbent on you, and becomes you, and " you can do it. You can lead an Army to Troy: be you " Agamemnon. You can engage in fingle Combat with " Hector: be you Achilles." But, if Therfites had come and claimed the Command, either he would not have obtained it; or, if he had, he would have difgraced himself, before the more Witneffes.

§. 2. Do you too, carefully deliberate upon this Matter: it is not what you think it. "I wear an old Cloke now; "and I shall have one then. I sleep upon the hard Ground "now; and I shall sleep so then. I will moreover take a "Wallet and a Staff, and go about, and will beg of those "I meet, and begin by (e) abusing them: and, if I see any "one using Means to take off the Hair from his Face, or ⁽c) This hath a remarkable Likeness to Matth. xxiv. 50, 51. especially in the Originals.

⁽d) i. e. run away.

⁽t) For Adidoceiv read Adidopur. UPTON.

" Body; or fetting his Curls, or walking in Purple, I will re-" buke him." If you imagine this to be the Thing, avaunt; come not near it: it doth not belong to you. But, if you imagine it to be what it really is, and do not think yourfelf unworthy of it, confider how great a Thing you undertake. First, with regard to yourself: you must no longer, in any Instance, appear like what you do now. You must accuse neither God nor Man. You must totally suppress Desire; and must transfer Aversion to such Things only as are dependent on Choice. You must have neither Anger, nor Refentment, nor Envy, nor Pity. Neither Boy, nor Girl, nor Fame, nor Delicacies in Eating, must have Charms for you. For you must know, that other Men indeed fence themselves with Walls, and Houses, and Darkness, when they do any thing of this kind, and have many Concealments: a Man shuts the Door, places somebody before the Apartment; "Say, He is gone out; fay, He is not at leifure." But the Cynic, instead of all this, must fence himself with virtuous Shame; otherwife He will act indecently, naked, and in the open Air. This is bis House; this, bis Door; this, bis Porter; this, bis Darkness. He must not wish to conceal any thing relating to himfelf: for, if he doth, he is gone; he hath loft the Cynic; the open, the free Character: he hath begun to fear fomething external: he hath begun to need a Concealment; nor can he get it when he will. For where shall he conceal himself, or how? For if this Tutor, this Pedagogue of the Public, should happen to slip, what must be fuffer? Can he then, who dreads these Things, be thoroughly bold within, and preferibe to other Men? Impracticable; impossible,

§. 3. In the first place then, you must purify your own ruling Faculty, conformably (f) to this Method of Life. Now, the Subject-matter for me to work upon, is my own Mind; as Wood is for a Carpenter, or Leather for a Shoemaker: and my Bufiness is, a right Use of the Appearances of Things. But Body is nothing to me; its Parts nothing to me. Let Death come when it will; either of the Whole. or of a Part. "Go into Exile." And whither? Can any one turn me out of the World? He cannot. But whereever I go, there is the Sun, the Moon, the Stars, Dreams, Auguries, Communication with God. And even this Preparation is, by no means, fufficient for a true Cynic. But it must farther be known, that He is a Messenger sent from Fupiter to Men, concerning Good and Evil; to show them, that they are mistaken, and seek the Essence of Good and Evil where it is not; but do not observe it where it is: that He is a Spy, like Diogenes, when he was brought to Philip, after the Battle of Charonea (g). For, in effect, a Cynic is a Spy, to discover what Things are friendly, what hostile, to Man: and he must, after making an accurate Observation, come and tell them the Truth: not be struck with Terror, so as to point out to them Enemies, where there are none; nor, in any other Instance, disconcerted or confounded by Appearances.

§. 4. He must then, if it should so happen, be able to lift up his Voice, come upon the Stage, and say, like Socrates, ⁽f) The Sense seems to require, that $\kappa \alpha t$ should be $\kappa \alpha \tau \alpha$; and it is so translated.

⁽g) Sec P. 79. Note (c).

" O Mortals, whither are you hurrying? What are you " about? Why do you tumble up and down, Wretches, " like blind Men? You are going a wrong Way, and have " forfaken the right. You feek Prosperity and (b) Happiness " in a wrong Place, where it is not; nor do you give Credit " to another, who shows you where it is. Why do you feek " it without? It is not in Body: if you do not believe er me, look upon (i) Myro; look upon Ofellius. It is not " in Wealth: if you do not believe me, look upon Crafus; " look upon the Rich of the prefent Age, how full of " Lamentation their Life is. It is not in Power: for, other-" wife, they, who have been twice and thrice Confuls, muft " be happy: but they are not. To whom shall we give " Credit in this Affair? To you who look only upon the " Externals of their Condition, and are dazled by Appear-44 ances, or to themselves? What do they say? Hear them, " when they groan, when they figh, when they think them-" felves more wretched, and in more Danger, from these " very Confulships, this Glory, and Splendor. It is not in " Empire: otherwife Nero and Sardanapalus had been " happy. But not even Agamemnon was happy, though a " better Man than Sardanapalus, or Nero. But, when " others are fnoring, what is He doing?"

He rends bis Hairs----

And what doth he fay himfelf?

⁽b) The Translation follows Lord Shaftesbury's Conjecture.

⁽i) Unknown Perfons, probably of great bodily Strength.

Scarce can my Knees these trembling Limbs sustain; And scarce my Heart support its Load of Pain.

POPE.

Why: which of your Affairs goes ill, poor Wretch? Your Possessions? No. Your Body? No. But you have Gold and Brass in Abundance. What then goes ill? That Part of you, whatever it be called, is neglected and corrupted, by which we defire, and are averfe; by which we purfue, and avoid .---- How neglected ?---- It is ignorant of that for which it was naturally formed, of the Essence of Good, and of the Effence of Evil. It is ignorant what is its own, and what another's. And, when any thing belonging to others goes ill, it fays, " I am undone; the Greeks " are in danger!" (Poor ruling Faculty! which alone is neglected, and hath no Care taken of it.) " They will " die by the Sword of the Trojans!" ---- And, if the Trojans should not kill them, will they not die ?--- "Yes: but not " all at once." ---- Why: where is the Difference? For, if it be an Evil to die, whether it be all at once, or fingly, it is equally an Evil. Will any thing more happen, than the Separation of Soul and Body (k)?---" Nothing."---And, when the Greeks perish, is the Door shut against you? Is it not in your own Power to die ?--- "It is."---- Why then do you lament, while you are a King, and hold the Scepter of Yove? A King is no more to be made unfortunate than a ⁽k) Were Conquerors deeply to confider, how much more happens than the mere Separation of Soul and Body, they would not, for Increase of Dominion, or a Point of fulse Honour, push Thousands at once into an unknown Eternity.

God. What are you then? You are a Shepherd (/), truly fo called: for you weep, just as Shepherds do, when the Wolf feizes any of their Sheep: and they who are governed by you are mere Sheep. But why did you come hither? Was your Desire in any Danger? Your Aversion? Your Pursuits? Your Avoidances? "No," says he: "but my "Brother's Wife hath been stolen."——Is it not great good Luck then, to be rid of a forry adulterous Wife?——"But "must we be held in Contempt by the Trejans?"——What are they? Wise Men, or Fools? If wise, why do you go to war with them? If Fools, why do you mind them?

§. 5. Where then doth our Good lie, fince it doth not lie in thefe Things? Tell us, Sir; you, who are our Meffenger and Spy.——Where you do not think, nor are willing to feek it. For, if you were willing, you would find it in ⁽¹⁾ We find this Phrase often used by the inspired Writers, to describe the Office and Duty of a King, or Ruler. And the most tender and affectionate Compassion is implied in it, Isiab xl. 11. where it is said of the KING of Kings, He shall feed bis Flock, like a Shepberd: He shall gather the Lambs with bis Arm, and carry them in bis Boson; and shall gently lead those that are with young. He accordingly applies this diffinguishing Character to himself, in several Places of the New Testament; especially 760 hr. x. 11. 14, 15, 16.

Homer speaks of Agamemon by this Name (which we see was not unufual in the Eath to express his Authority and Care: but Epidetus applies it as a Term of Reproach, to imply Ignorance, and Meanness of Spirit. One cannot help observing, on what is here said of Agamemon, the Selfishness of the Stoic Doctrine; which, as it all along forbids Pity and Compassion, will have even a King to look upon the Welfare of his People, and a General on the Prefervation of his Soldiers, as Matters quite foreign and indifferent to him.

yourselves: nor would you wander abroad, nor seek what belongs to others, as your own. Turn your Thoughts into yourselves. Consider the Pre-conceptions which you have. What do you imagine Good to be? -- - What is prosperous, happy, unhindered .---- Well: and do not you naturally imagine it great? Do not you imagine it valuable? Do not you imagine it incapable of being hurt? In what Materials then must you seek Prosperity, and Exemption from Hindrance? In that which is inflaved, or free?----In the Free. --- Is your Body then inflaved, or free?----We do not know .---- Do not you know, that it is the Slave of Fever, Gout, Defluxion, Dyfentery: of a Tyrant; of Fire, Steel; of every thing stronger than itself?---Yes, it is a Slave.----How then can any thing belonging to the Body be unhindered? And how can that be great, or valuable, which is, by Nature, lifeless, Earth, Clay? What then, have you nothing free ?----Poffibly nothing .---- Why: who can compell you to affent to what appears false ?----No one.----Or who, not to affent to what appears true ?---No one.----Here then you fee, that there is fomething in you, by Nature, free. But who of you can defire or be averse, or use his active Powers of Pursuit or Avoidance, or concert, or purpose, unless he hath been impressed by an Appearance of its being for his Advantage, or his Duty?----No one.----You have then, in these too, something unrestrained and free. Cultivate this, Wretches; take care of this; feek for Good here .-- . But how is it possible, that a Man, worth nothing, " naked, without House or Home, squalid, unattended, who "belongs to no Country, can lead a prosperous Life?"----See: God hath fent us One, to show, in fact, that it is P p 2 poslible.

" Take Notice of me, that I am without a possible (m). "Country, without a House, without an Estate, without a " Servant: I lie on the Ground: no Wife, no Children, no "Coat (n); but only Earth, and Heaven, and one forry " Cloke. And, what do I want? Am not I without Sor-" row, without Fear? Am not I free? Did any of you " ever fee me disappointed of my Defire, or incurring my " Aversion? Did I ever blame God or Man? Did I ever " accuse any one? Hath any of you seen me look discon-" tented? How do I treat those whom you fear, and of " whom you are ftruck with Awe? Is it not like forry "Slaves? Who that fees me, doth not think, that he fees " his own King and Mafter?" This is the Language, this the Character, this the Undertaking, of a Cynic. No: I warrant you; but the Wallet, and the Staff, and the great Taws: fwallowing, or treafuring up, whatever is given you; abufing unfeafonably those you meet; or showing a brawny Arm. Do you confider, how you shall attempt so important an Affair? First take a Mirror. View your Shoulders, examine your Back, your Thighs. You are going to be inrolled a Combatant at the Olympic Games, Man; not in a poor slight Contest. In the Olympic Games, a Champion is not allowed merely to be conquered, and depart: but must first be disgraced, in the View of the whole World; not only of the Athenians, or Spartans, or Nicopolitans: and then he, who hath rashly departed, must be whipt too; and, before that, must suffer Thirst, and Heat; and swallow an Abundance of Dust.

⁽m) It is observable, that Epitatus seems to think it a necessary Qualification in a Teacher, sent from God, for the Instruction of Mankind, to be destitute of all external Advantages, and a suffering Character. Thus doth this excellent Man, who had carried human Reason to so great a Height, bear Testimony to the Propriety of that Method which the Divine Wisdom hath thought sit to follow, in the Scheme of the Gospel; whose Great Author had not vabere to lay bis Head: and which some later Ages, have inconsiderately urged as an Argument against the Christian Religion. The infinite Disparity between the Proposal of the Example of Disgener, in Epistatus, and of our Redeemer, in the New Testament, is too obvious to need any Enlargement.

⁽n) The Translation follows Mr. Upton's Conjecture, of percoragion, instead of rearragesture.

§. 6. Confider carefully; know yourself; consult the Divinity: attempt nothing without God: for, if he counsels you, be assured, that it is his Will, that you should be a great Man; or, [which comes to the same thing,] suffer many a Blow. For there is this very fine Circumstance connected with the Character of a Cynic, that he must be beat like an Ass; and, when he is beat, must love those who beat him; as the Father, as the Brother of All (a). No, to be sure: but, if any body beats you, stand publicly and roar out, "O, Cæsar, am I to suffer such Things, in breach of your Peace? Let us go before the Proconful."——But what is Cæsar to a Cynic, or what is the Proconful, or any one else, but Jupiter? Who hath deputed him, and Whom he serves. Doth he invoke any other but Him? And is he not perfuaded, that whatever he fuffers of this Sort, it is Jupiter, who doth it to exercise him? Now Hercules, when he was exercised by Eurystheus, did not think himself miserable; but executed, with Alacrity, all that was to be done. And shall be who is appointed to the Combat, and exercised by Jupiter, cry out, and take offence at Things? A worthy Person, truly, to bear the Scepter of Diogenes! Hear what He, in a Fever, faid to those who were passing by (p). "Sorry Wretches, why do not you flay? Do you take fuch " a Journey to Olympia, to fee the Destruction, or Combat, " of the Champions; and have you no Inclination to fee the " Combat between a Man and a Fever?" Such a one, who took a Pride in difficult Circumstances, and thought himfelf worthy to be a Spectacle to those who passed by, was a likely Person, indeed, to accuse God, who had deputed him, as treating him unworthily! For what Subject of Accufation shall he find? That he preserves a Decency of Behaviour? With what doth he find fault? That he fets his own Virtue in a clearer Light?----Well: and what doth he fay of Poverty? Of Death? Of Pain? How did he compare his Happiness with that of the Persian King; or rather thought it beyond Comparison. For, amidst Perturbations, and Griefs, and Fears, and disappointed Desires, and incurred

⁽e) Compare this with the Chriftian Precepts, of Forbearance, and Love to Enemies, Matth. v. 39----44. The Reader will observe, that Chrift Specifies higher Injuries and Provocations than Epidetus doth; and requires of all his Followers, what Epidetus describes only as the Duty of one or two extraordiuary Persons, as such.

⁽p) St. Jerom, cited by Mr. Upton, gives the following, fomewhat different, Account of this Matter. Diagraes, as he was going to the Olympic Games, was taken with a Fever, and laid himfelf down in the Road: his Friends would have put him into fome Vehicle; but he refused it, and bid them go on to the Show, "This Night," faid he, "I will either conquer, or be conquered. If I conquer the Fever, I "will come to the Games; if it conquers me, I will descend to Hades," Aversions, how can there be any Entrance for Happinels? And, where there are corrupt Principles, there must all these Things necessarily be.

§. 7. The same young Man enquiring, Whether, if a Friend should be willing to come to him, and take care of him when he was fick, he should comply? And where, fays Epictetus, will you find me the Friend of a Cynic? For to be worthy of being numbered among his Friends, a Person ought to be fuch another as himfelf: he ought to be a Partner of the Scepter and the Kingdom, and a worthy Minister, if he would be honoured with his Friendship; as Diogenes was the Friend of Antisthenes; as Crates, of Diogenes. Do you think, that he who only comes to him, and falutes him, is his Friend; and that he will think him worthy of being entertained as fuch? If fuch a Thought comes into your Head, rather look round you, for some clever Dunghill, to shelter you in your Fever, from the North Wind, that you may not perish by taking Cold. But you feem to me, to want [only] to get into fomebody's House, and to be well fed there a while. What Bufiness have you then, even to attempt so important an Affair as this?

§. 8. But (faid the young Man) will a Cynic engage himfelf in Marriage, and the Production of Children, as a principal Point (q)?

If you will allow me a Republic of Sages, no one there, perhaps, will readily apply himself to the Cynic Philosophy-⁽q) The Stoics directed this; and the Epicureans forbad it.

296 The Discourses of Book III.

For on whose Account should he embrace that Method of Life? However, suppose he doth, there will be nothing to reffrain him from marrying, and having Children. For his Wife will be fuch another as himfelf; his Father-in-Law fuch another as himself; and his Children will be brought up in the fame manner. But as the State of Things now is, like that of an Army prepared for Battle, is it not necessary that a Cynic should be without (r) Distraction; intirely attentive to the Service of God: at Liberty to walk about among Mankind: not tied down to vulgar Duties, nor entangled in Relations; which, if he transgresses, he will no longer keep the Character of a wife and good Man; and which, if he observes, there is an End-of him, as the Mesfenger, and Spy, and Herald of the Gods? For, confider, there are fome Offices due to his Father-in-Law; fome to the other Relations of his Wife; fome to his Wife herfelf; befides, after this, he is (s) confined to the Care of his Family when fick, and making Provision for their Support.

⁽r) It is remarkable, that Epidetus here uses the same Word (απερισπατως) with St. Paul, 1 Cor. vii. 35. and urges the same Consideration, of applying wholly to the Service of God, to distinate from Marriage. His Observation too, that the State of Things was then (ως εν παραπαξα) like that of an Army prepared for Battle, nearly resembles the Apostle's (ενετωσα αποχαγη) prefer Necessign. St. Paul says, 2 Tim. ii. 4. (ωδεστραπευομενος εμπλεκεται, &c.) το Man that varreth entangleth bimself with the Affairs of this Life. So Epidetus says here, that a Cynic must not be (εμππαλεμενως) entangled in Relations, &c. From these and many other Passages of Epidetus, one would be inclined to think, that he was not unconcaptually with St. Paul's Epistles; or, that he had heard something of the Christian Doctrine. Yet see Introduction, §. 40.

⁽⁵⁾ Ennherral should be equinciple; and is so translated.

Not to fpeak of other Things, he must have a Vessel, to warm Water in, to bathe his Child. There must be Wool, Oil, a Bed, a Cup for his Wise, after her Delivery; and thus the Furniture increases: more Business, more Distraction. Where, for the future, is this King, whose Time is devoted to the public Good?

To whom its Safety, a whole People owes.

Who ought to overfee others; married Men, Fathers of Children: [to observe] who treats his Wife well; who, ill: who quarrels: which Family is well regulated; which, not: like a Physician, who goes about, and feels the Pulse of his Patients: "You have a Fever; you, the Head-ach; you, " the Gout. Do you (t) abstain from Food: do you eat: " do you omit Bathing: you must have an Incision made: " you, be cauterifed." Where shall He have Leisure for this, who is tied down to vulgar Duties? Must not he provide Clothes for his Children; and fend them with Pens, and Ink, and Paper, to a Schoolmafter? Must not he provide a Bed for them? (For they cannot be Cynics from their very Birth) Otherwise, it would have been better to expose them, as foon as they were born, than to kill them thus. Do you fee to what we bring down our Cynic? How we deprive him of his Kingdom?--- "Well: but Crates (u) was mar-" ried."

⁽t) AGITHGOV. UPTON. WOLFIUS.

⁽ii) Crates was a Theban of Birth and Fortune, who was so charmed by the Appearance of Telephus, in the Character of a dirty, ragged Beggar,

"ried." The Cafe of which you fpeak was a particular one; arting from Love; and the Woman, another Crause. But we are enquiring about ordinary and (b) common Marriages; and in this Enquiry; we do not find the Affair mightly fuited to the Condition of a Cynic.

§. 9. How then shall he keep up Society?

For Heaven's fake, do they confer a greater Benefit upon the World, who leave two or three fniveling Children in their ftead, than those, who, as far as possible, overfee all Mankind; what they do; how they live; what they attend to; what they neglect, contrary to their Duty. Did all they, who left Children to the Thebans, do them more Good than Epaminondas, who died childles? And did Priam, upon the Stage, that he gave away all his Estate, assumed the Wallet and Staff, and turned Cynic. Hipparchia, a Thracian Lady, was for affected by the Discourses and Manners of this polite Philosopher, that. the fell desperately in love with him; and neither the Riches, Beauty, or Distinction, of others, who paid their Addresses to her, were able to rival him, in her Heart. Her Relations vainly endeavoured to oppose her Inclination: the was deaf to all their Remonstrances; and even threatened to kill herfelf, unless the was fuffered to marry Crates. At the Defire of her Family, he tried, himfelf, to diffuade her from this Scheme. He pointed out to her the Deformity of his Person; and, throwing down his Wallet and Staff before her, told her, these were all the Riches she was to expect; and that his Wife must pursue the same Course of Life, as he did: and defired her to confider of it. But no Confideration was able to shake her Resolution. She married him, and became as absolute a Cynic as himfelf; utterly difregarding all external Propriety and Decency. Sec. DIOG. LAERTIUS, in their Lives.

⁽v) Mr. Upton's Reading.

who was the Father of fifty Profligates, or Danaus (w), or Æolus, conduce more to the Advantage of Society, than Homer? Shall a military Command, or any other Post, then, exempt a Man from marrying, and becoming a Father, fo that he shall be thought to have made sufficient Amends for the Want of Children: and shall not the Kingdom of a Cynic be a proper Compensation for it? Perhaps we do not understand his Grandeur, nor duly represent to ourselves the Character of Diogenes; but confider Cynics as they are now; who fland like Dogs watching at Tables, and who imitate the others in nothing, unless, perhaps, in breaking wind; but absolutely in nothing besides: else this [which you have objected] would not move us; nor should we be astonished, that a Cynic will not marry, nor have Children. Confider, Sir, that he is the Father of Humankind: that all Men are his Sons, and all Women his Daughters. Thus he attends: thus takes care of All. What! do you think it is from Impertinence, that he rebukes those he meets? He doth it as a Father, as a Brother, as a Minister of the common Parent, Jove.

⁽w) Danaus and Egyptus were the Sons of Belus. Danaus had fifty Daughters, who, from their Grandfuther, were called Belides; and Egyptus, fifty Sons. After a Quarrel between the two Brothers, a Reconciliation was agreed, upon Condition of a Marriage between their Childen. But Danaus, having learnt from an Oracle, that he was to be killed by one of his Sons-in-Law, commanded his Daughters to murder their Hufbands, and furnished them with Daggers for that Purpofe. They all, except one, executed this cruel Order. The Poets reprefent them, as punished, in the infernal Regions, by an everlasting unavailing Attempt, to fill a Sieve with Water.

- § 10. Ask me, if you please, too, Whether a Cynic will engage in the Administration of the Commonwealth. What Commonwealth do you enquire after, Blockhead, greater than what he administers? Whether be will harangue among the Athenians, about Revenues and Taxes, whose Business it is to debate with all Mankind; with the Athenians, Corinthians, and Romans, equally; not about Taxes and Revenues or Peace and War, but about Happiness and Misery, Prosperity and Adversity, Slavery and Freedom. Do you ask me, whether a Man engages in the Administration of the Commonwealth, who administers such a Commonwealth as this? Ask me too, whether he will accept any Command? I will answer you again, What Command, Fool, greater than that which he now exercises?
- §. 11. A Cynic, however, hath need of a Conftitution duly qualified: for, if he should appear confumptive, thin, and pale, his Testimony hath no longer the same Authority. For he must not only give a Proof to the Vulgar, by the Constancy of his Mind, that it is possible to be a Man of Figure and Merit, without those Things that strike them with Admiration: but he must show too, by his Body, that a simple and sender Dict, under the open Air, doth no Injury to the Constitution. "See, I and my Body are a Witness to this." As Diogenes did: for he went about fresh, and plump; and gained the Attention of the Many, by the very Appearance of a healthy Body. But a pitiable Cynic seems a mere Beggar: all avoid him; all are offended at him: for he ought not to appear flovenly, so as to drive People from him; but even his rough Negligence should be neat and engaging.

§ 12. Much natural Agreeablenes and Acuteness are likewise necessary in a Cynic, (otherwise he becomes a mere Driveller, and nothing else); that he may be able to give an Answer readily, and pertinently, upon every Occasion. Like Diogenes, to one who asked him; "Are you that Diogenes, "who do not believe, there are any Gods?" "How so, "replied he, when I think you odious to Them?" Again: when Alexander surprised him steeping, and repeated,

To waste long Nights in indolent Repose Ill fits a Chief, who mighty Nations guides, before he was quite awake, he answered,

Directs in Council, and in War prefides.

Pope's Homer. B. H. V. 27.

§. 13. But, above all, the ruling Faculty of a Cynic must be purer than the Sun: otherwise he must necessarily be a common Cheat, and a Raseal; if, while he is guilty of some Vice himself, he reproves others. For, consider how the Case stands. Arms and Guards give a Power to common Kings and Tyrants of reproving, and of punishing Delinquents, though they are wicked themselves: but to a Cynic, instead of Arms and Guards, Conscience gives this Power; when he knows, that he hath watched and laboured for Mankind: that he hath slept pure, and waked still purer:

and that he hath regulated all his Thoughts as the Friend," as the Minister of the Gods, as a Partner of the Empire of Jupiter: that he is ready to say, upon all Occasions, Conduct me, Jove, and thou, O Deftiny.

And, " if it thus pleases the Gods, thus let it be." should he not dare to speak boldly to his own Brethren, to his Children; in a word, to his Kindred? Hence he, who is thus qualified, is neither impertinent, nor a bufy Body: for he is not busied about the Affairs of others, but his own, when he overfees the Transactions of Men. Otherwise say, that a General is a bufy Body, when he overfees, examines, and watches his Soldiers; and punishes the Disorderly. But, if you reprove others, at the very Time that you have a Cake [concealed] under your own Arm, I will ask you; Had you not better, Sir, go into a Corner, and eat up what you have stolen? But what have you to do with the Concerns of others? For what are you? Are you the Bull in the Herd, or the Queen of the Bees? Show me fuch Enfigns of Empire, as she hath from Nature. But, if you are a Drone, and arrogate to yourfelf the Kingdom of the Bees, do not you think, that your fellow Citizens will drive you out, just as the Bees do the Drones?

§. 14. A Cynic must, besides, have so much Patience, as to seem insensible, and a Stone, to the Vulgar. No one reviles, no one beats, no one affronts bim; but he hath surrendered his Body to be treated at pleasure, by any one who will. For he remembers, that the Inserior, in whatever Instance it is the inserior, must be conquered by the Superior; and the Body is inserior to the Multitude, the Weaker to the Stronger. He never therefore, enters into a Combat, where he can be conquered; but immediately gives up what belongs to others: he doth not claim what is flavish and dependent: but, where Choice, and the Use of the Appearances, are concerned, you will fee, that he hath fo many Eyes, you would fay Argos was blind to him. Is his Affent ever precipitate? His Purfuits, eyer rash? His Defire, ever disappointed? His Aversion, ever incurred? His Intention, ever fruitless? Is he ever querulous, ever dejected, ever envious? Here lies all his Attention and Application. With regard to other Things, he fnores fupine. All is Peace. There is no Robber, no Tyrant of the Choice. --- But of the Body? ----Yes.---The Eftate?----Yes.----Magistracies and Honours? ---Yes. And what doth he care for these? When any one therefore would frighten him with them, he fays, "Go, " look for Children: Vizards are frightful to Them; but I " know they are only Shell, and have nothing withinfide."

§. 15. Such is the Affair about which you are deliberating: therefore, if you pleafe, for Heaven's fake, defer it; and first consider how you are prepared for it. Mind what Hetter says to Andromache.

No more....but haften to thy Tafks at home, There guide the Spindle, and direct the Loom. Me, Glory fummons, to the Martial Scene, The Field of Combat is the Sphere for Men.

POPE'S Homer.

Thus confcious he was of his own Qualifications, and of her Weakness.

CHAPTER XXIII.

Concerning fuch as read and dispute, oftentatiously.

§. 1. TIRST fay to yourfelf, what you would be; and then do, what you have to do. For, in almost every thing elfe, we fee this to be the Practice. Olympic Champions first determine what they would be, and then act accordingly. To a Racer, in a longer Course, there must be one kind of Diet, Walking, Anointing, and Exercise: to one in a shorter, all these must be different; and to a Pentathlete (a), still more different. You will find the Case the same in the manual Arts. If a Carpenter, you must have fuch and fuch Things: if a Smith, fuch other. For, if we do not refer each of our Actions to some End, we shall act at random: if to an improper one, we shall miss our Aim. Further: there is a general and a particular End. First, to act as a Man. What is comprehended in this? Not to be, though gentle, like a Sheep; nor mischievous, like a wild Beast. But the particular End relates to the Study, and Choice of each Individual. A Harper is to act as a Harper; a Carpenter, as a Carpenter; a Philosopher, as a Philosopher; an Orator, as an Orator. When therefore you fay, "Come, and hear me " read:" observe first, not to do this at random; and, in the next place, after you have found to what End you refer it, confider whether it be a proper one. Would you be useful, or be praifed? You prefently hear him fay, "What do I " value the Praise of the Multitude?" And he says well:

⁽a) Sec Note a. p. 223.

for this is nothing to a Musician, or a Geometrician, as such. You would be useful then. In what? Tell us, that we too may run, to make Part of your Audience. Now, is it possible for any one to benefit others, who hath received no Benefit himfelf? No: for neither can he, who is not a Carpenter, or a Shoemaker, benefit any, in respect to those Arts. Would you know then, whether you have received Benefit? Produce your Principles, Philosopher: What is the Aim and Promife of Defire? Not to be disappointed. What of Aversion? Not to be incurred. Come: do we fulfil this Promife? Tell me the Truth: but, if you falfify, I will tell it you. The other Day, when your Audience came but coldly together, and did not receive what you faid, with Acclamations of Applaufe, you went away dejected. Again: the other Day, when you were praifed, you went about, asking every body, "What did you think of me?"----"Upon my Life, Sir, it was prodigious."----" But, how " did I express myself upon that Subject?"---" Which?"----"Where I gave a Description of Pan, and the Nymphs (b)." ---- "Most excellently."----And do you tell me, after this, that you regulate your Defires and Aversions conformably to Nature? Get you gone. Perfuade fomebody elfe. Did not you, the other Day, praise a Man, contrary to your own Opinion? Did not you flatter a certain Senator? Would you wish your own Children to be like him?---" Heaven " forbid!"---" Why then did you praise and cajole him?" --- "He is an ingenious young Man, and attentive to " Difcourfes." --- " How fo?" --- " He admires me." ----

⁽b) Mr. Upton observes, that these florid Descriptions were the principal Study, of the Sophists.

Now indeed you have produced your Proof. After all, what do you think? Do not these very People secretly despise you? When therefore a Man, conscious of no good Action, or Intention, finds fome Philosopher faying, "You are a " great Genius, and of a frank and candid Disposition;" what do you think he fays, but, "This Man hath some Need " of me." Pray tell me, what Action of a great Genius he hath shown. You see, he hath long conversed with you, hath heard your Discourses, hath heard your Lectures. Hath he turned his Attention to himfelf? Hath he perceived his own Faults? Hath he thrown off his Conceit? Doth he feek an Inftructor?---Yes, he doth.---An Inftructor how to live? No, Fool; but how to talk: for it is upon this Account that he admires you. Hear what he favs. "This 66 Man writes with very great Art, and much more finely than " Dion(c)." That is quite another Thing. Doth he fay, This is a modest, faithful, calm Person? But, if he said this too, I would ask him, fince he is faithful, What is it to be faithful(d)? And, if he could not tell, I would add, First learn the Meaning of what you fay, and then speak. While you are in this bad Disposition then, and gaping after Applauders, and counting your Hearers, would you be of Benefit to others? " To-day I had many more Hearers." "Yes, many: we "think there were Five hundred." You fay nothing: make " them a Thousand .--- " Dion never had so great an Au-" dience." " How should he?"--- " And they have a ⁽c) Dion was a Greek Writer of thote Times; called, for his Eloquence, Chryfeltom, or Golden-mouthed; as one of the Fathers of the Church was afterwards.

⁽d) The Sense seems absolutely to require, that the latter outros should be either expanged or changed into Touto.

" fine Tafte for Discourses."---" What is excellent, Sir, " will move even a Stone." Here is the Language of a Philosopher! Here is the Disposition of one, who is to be beneficial to Mankind! Here is the Man, attentive to Difcourfes! Who hath read the Works of the Socratic Philosophers, as fuch; not as if they were the Writings of Orators, like Lyfias and Isocrates. " I have often wondered by what Arou-" ments (e), &c. No: By what Argument: that is the more " perfectly accurate Expression." Is this to have read them any otherwise, than as you read little Pieces of Poetry? If you read them as you ought, you would not dwell on fuch Trifles; but would rather confider fuch a Paffage as this: Anytus and Melitus may kill; but they cannot burt me. And. I am always fo disposed, as to regard none of my Friends, but that Reason, which, after Examination, appears to me to be the best. Hence, who ever heard Socrates say, "I know, or " teach, any thing?" But he fent different People to different Inftructors: fo they came to him, defiring to be recommended to the Philosophers; and he took and recommended them. No: but I warrant you, as he accompanied them, he used to give them such Advice as this: " Hear me dis-" course To-day at the House of Quadratus" (f).---Why should I hear you? Have you a Mind to show me how finely you put Words together, Sir? And what Good doth that do you? "But praise me."----What do you mean by praising

(/) It might be usual for Persons of Fashion to lend their Houses, for Sophists and Orators to declaim in. UPTON.

⁽e) These Words are the Beginning of Xenophon's Memoirs of Socrates; and it was a Debate among the minute Critics, whether Argument or Arguments was the proper Reading. UPTON.

you?---Say, incomparable! prodigious!---Well: I do fay it. But, if Praise be that which the Philosophers call by the Appellation of Good, what have I to praise you for? If it be a Good to speak well, teach me, and I will praise you.---" What then, ought these Things to be heard without Plea-" fure?"---By no means. I do not hear even a Harper, without Pleafure; but am I therefore to fland playing upon the Harp? Hear what Socrates fays to his Judges. " would not be decent for me to appear before you, at this " Age, composing Speeches, like a Boy." Like a Boy, fays he. For it is, without doubt, a pretty Knack, to chuse out Words, and place them together: and then to read or fpeak them gracefully in public; and, in the midft of the Discourse, to observe, that "he vows by all that is good, there are but " Few capable of these Things." But doth a Philosopher apply to People to hear him? Doth not he attract those who are fitted to receive Benefit from him, in the same manner as the Sun, or their necessary Food doth? What Physician applies to any body to be cured by him? (Though now indeed I hear, that the Physicians at Rome apply for Patients; but in my Time they were applied to.) "I apply to you, to " come and hear that you are in a bad Way; and that you " take care of every thing, but what you ought: that you "know not what is good or evil; and are unfortunate, and " unhappy." A fine Application! And yet, unless the Discourse of a Philosopher hath this Effect, both that, and the Speaker, are void of Life (g). Rufus used to say, If you are at leifure to praife me, I fpeak to no Purpofe. And indeed he used to speak in such a manner, that each of us, who heard him, supposed, that some Person had accused us to him; he so that upon what was done by us, and placed the Faults of every one, before his Eyes.

⁽g) St. James uses the same Word, when he saith, Faith without Works is dead,

Chap. 23. EPICTETUS.

₹309

§. 2. The School of a Philosopher is a Surgery. You are not to go out of it with Pleafure, but with Pain; for you come there, not in Health: but one of you hath a diflocated Shoulder; another, an Abscess; a third, a Fistula; a fourth, the Head-ach. And am I then, to fit uttering pretty trifling Thoughts, and little Exclamations, that, when you have praifed me, you may each of you go away with the same diflocated Shoulder, the same aching Head, the same Fistula, and the same Abscess, that you brought? And is it for this that young Men are to travel? And do they leave their Parents, their Friends, their Relations, and their Estates, that they may praife you, while you are uttering little Exclamations? Was this the Practice of Socrates? Of Zeno? Of Cleanthes? "What then! is there not in speaking, a Style " and Manner of Exhortation?" ---- Who denies it? Just as there is a Manner of Confutation, and of Instruction. But who ever therefore, added that of Oftentation, for a fourth? For in what doth the exhortatory Manner confift? In being able to show to one and all, the Contradictions in which they are involved; and that they care for every thing rather than what they mean to care for: for they mean the Things conducive to Happiness; but they feek them where they are not to be found. To effect this, must a thousand Seats be placed, and an Audience invited; and you, in a fine Robe, or Cloke, ascend the Rostrum, and describe the Death of Abbilles? Forbear, for Heaven's sake, to bring, as far as you are able, good Words and Practices into Disgrace. Nothing, to be sure, gives more Force to Exhortation, than when the Speaker shows, that he hath need of the Hearers! But tell me, who, when he hears you reading or speaking, is solicitous about bimself? Or turns his Attention upon bimself? Or says, when he is gone away, "The Philosopher hit me "well." Instead of this, even though you are in high Vogue, is not all that one Man says; "He spoke finely about Xerxes."—"No, says another; but on the Battle of Thermopyle." Is this the Audience of a Philosopher?

CHAPTER XXIV.

That we ought not to be affected, by Things not in our own Power.

§. 1. Let T not what is contrary to Nature in another, be an Evil to you: for you were not born to be depreffed, and unhappy, along with others; but to be happy, along with them. And, if any one is unhappy, remember, that he is fo for himfelf: for God made all Men to enjoy Felicity, and a settled good Condition. He hath surnished all with Means for this Purpose; having given them some Things for their own; others, not for their own. Whatever is subject to Restraint, Compulsion, or Deprivation, not their own: whatever is not subject to Restraint, their own. And the Essence of Good and Evil, he hath placed in Things which are our own; as it became Him, who provides for, and protects us, with paternal Carc.

But I have parted with fuch a one, and he is in Grief.

And why did he esteem what belonged to another, his own? Why did he not confider, while he was pleased with seeing you, that you are mortal, that you are subject to change your Abode? Therefore he bears the Punishment of his own Folly. But to what Purpole, or for what Cause do you too break (a) your Spirits? Have not you neither studied these Things? But, like trifling, silly Women, considered the Things you delighted in; the Places, the Persons, the Conversations, as if they were to last for ever; and now sit crying, because you do not see the same People, nor live in the same Place? Indeed you deserve to be so affected, and thus to become more wretched than Ravens or Crows; which, without groaning, or longing for their former State, can sly where they will, build their Nests in another Place, and cross the Seas.

Ay: but this happens from their Want of Reason.

Was Reason then given to us by the Gods, for the Purpose of Unhappines and Misery, to make us live wretched and lamenting? O, by all means, let every one be immortal! Let nobody go from home! Let us never go from home ourselves, but remain rooted to a Spot, like Plants! And, if any of our Acquaintance should quit his Abode, let us sit and cry; and when he comes back, let us dance, and clapour Hands, like Children. Shallwe never wean ourselves, and remember what we have heard from the Philosophers, (unless we have heard them only as juggling Enchanters;) That the World is one great City, and the Substance one, out of which it is formed: that there must necessarily be a certain Rotation of Things: that some must give way to others; fome be diffolved, and others rife in their flead; fome remain in the fame Situation, and others be moved: but that all is full of Friendship: first of the Gods, and then of Men, by Nature endeared to each other: that some must be separated; others live together, rejoicing in the Present, and not grieving for the Absent: and that Man, besides a natural Greatness of Mind, and Contempt of Things independent on Choice, is likewife formed not to be rooted to the Earth: but to go at different Times to different Places; fometimes on urgent Occasions, and sometimes merely for the Sake of Observation. Such was the Case of Ulysses; who,

⁽a) There is no need of Salmaffui' Change of arm τιυς, &c. to arratures, &c. if, for sri τι αλας, one reads επινλάς. The τι might arite from a Miltake in writing τι twice over. Επελλάσει is used in the fame Senle, in L. 3, c. 26, p. 527, of Mr. Upton's Edition. If αλαω hath it, the present Reading many fland.

Wand'ring from Clime to Clime observant stray'd, Their Manners noted, and their States survey'd, Pope's Odyst. I.

And yet, before him, of Hercules, to travel over the World,

Just and unjust recording in his Mind, And, with sure Eyes, inspecting all Mankind.

POPE's Odyff. XVII. v. 580.

To expell and clear away the one, and, in its stead, to introduce the other. Yet how many Friends do you think he must have at Thebes? How many at Argos? How many at Athens? And how many did he acquire in his Travels?

He married too, when he thought it a proper Time, and became a Father, and then quitted his Children; not lamenting and longing for them, nor as if he had left them Orphans: for he knew, that no human Creature is an Orphan; but that there is a Father, who always, and without Intermiflion, takes care of All. For he had not merely heard it, as Matter of Talk, that Jupiter was the Father of Mankind; but he efterned and called him his own Father, and performed all that he did, with a View to Him. Hence, he was, in every Place, able to live happy. But it is never possible to make Happiness consistent with a Defire of what is not present. For (b) what is happy must have all it wishes for; must resemble a Person satisfied with Food: there must be no Thirst, no Hunger.

But Ulysse longed for his Wife, and sat crying on a Rock. Why: do you mind Homer, and his Fables, in every thing? Or, if Ulysse really did cry, what was he, but a wretched Man? But what wise and good Man is wretched? The Universe is furely but ill governed, unless Jupiter takes care, that his Subjects may be happy like himself. But these are unlawful and profane Thoughts; and Ulysse, if he did indeed cry and bewail himself, was not a good Man. For who can be a good Man, who doth not know what he is? And who knows this, and sorgets, that all Things made are perishable; and that it is not possible for Man and Man always to live together? What then? To desire Impossibilities is base and foolish: it is the Behaviour of a (c) Stranger [to the World]; of one who fights against God, the only way he can, by his Principles.

⁽b) Το γαρ ευδαιμονουν απέχαν δα παιτα α θελα, πεπληρωμένω τινι ερικεταί. This bears a ftrong Refemblance to απέχω δε παιτα και πέριοσευω, πεπληρωμαι, &c. Phil. is. 18.

But my Mother grieves, when she doth not see me.

And why hath not she learnt these Doctrines? I do not say, that Care ought not to be taken that she may not lament; but that we are not to wish absolutely, what is not in our own Power. Now, the Grief of another is not in our Power: but my own Grief is. I will therefore absolutely suppress my own, for that is in my Power; and I will endeavour to suppress another's Grief, as far as I am able: but I will not endeavour it absolutely, otherwise I shall fight against God; I shall resist Jupiter, and oppose Him, in the Administration of the Universe. And not only my (d) Children's Children will bear the Punishment of this Disobedience, and Fighting against God, but I myself too; starting, and full of Perturbation, both in the Day-time, and in my Dreams by Night; trembling at every Message, and having my (e) Enjoyment dependent on the Intelligence of others. "Somebody is come from Rome." " No Harm, I hope." Why, what Harm can happen to you, where you are not?--- "From Greece." "No Harm, I "hope." Why, at this Rate, every Place may be the Cause of Misfortune to you. Is it not enough for you to be unfortunate where you are, but it must be beyond Sea too, and by Letters? Such is the Security of your Condition!

⁽c) The Greek should be pointed, ξειαυ, θεαμαχουντος...

⁽d) An Allufion to Homer.

⁽e) The Translation here follows a Conjecture of Wolfius; who reads, for ενπεθιακ», ενπαθείαν. The fame Word occurs in B. IV. c. 3. p. 582. of Mr. Upton's Edition; and is there translated in the fame manner.

But what if my Friends there should be dead?

What indeed, but that those are dead, who were born to die. Do you at once wish to live to be old, and yet not to fee the Death of any one you love? Do not you know, that, in a long Course of Time, many and various Events must necessarily happen? That a Fever must get the better of one; a Highwayman, of another; a Tyrant, of a third? For such is the World we live in; such they who live in it with us. Heats and Colds, improper Diet, Journies, Voyages, Winds, and various Accidents destroy some, banish others; destine one to an Embassy, another to a Camp. And now, pray, sit in a Flutter about all these Things; lamenting, disappointed, wretched, dependent on another; and that not one or two, but ten thousand times ten thousand.

§. 2. Is this what you have heard from the Philosophers? This what you have learnt? Do not you know (f) what fort of a Thing a Warfare is? One must keep Guard; another go out for a Spy; another, to Battle too. It is neither possible, that all should be in the same Place, nor indeed better: but you, neglecting to perform the Orders of your General, complain, whenever any thing a little hard is commanded; and do not consider what you make the Army become, as far as lies in your Power. For, if all should imitate you, nobody will dig a Trench, or throw up a Rampart, or watch, or expose himself to Danger; but every one will appear useles to the Expedition. Again: if you were a Sailor in a

⁽f) The Translation here follows Mr. Upton's Conjecture, in his Addenda.

Voyage, fix upon one Place, and there remain. If it should be necessary to climb the Mast, refuse to do it; if to run to the Head of the Ship, refuse to do it. And what Captain will bear you? Would not he throw you over-board, as a useless Piece of Goods, and mere Luggage, and a bad Example to the other Sailors? Thus also, in the present Case: every one's Life is a (g) Warfare, and that long and various. You must observe the Duty of a Soldier, and perform every thing, at the Nod of your General; and even, if possible, divine what he would have done. For there is no Comparison between the above-mentioned General and This, either in Power, or Excellence of Character. You are placed in an extensive Command, and not in a mean Post; but you are a Senator (b): Do not you know, that fuch a one must spend but little Time on his Affairs at home; but be much abroad, either commanding or obeying; attending on the Duties either of a Magistrate, a Soldier, or a Judge. And now pray, would you be fixed and rooted to the same Spot, like a Plant?

Why: it is pleasant.

Who denies it? And so is a Ragout pleasant; and a fine Woman is pleasant. Is not this just what They say who make Pleasure their End? Do not you perceive whose Language you have spoken? That of Epicureans and Catamites. And ⁽g) This Figure is frequently nied both by sacred and prosanc Authors. See Job, vii. 1. Epb. vi. 12. 1 Pet. ii. 11. &c. Vivere militare est. Life is a State of War. Sen. Epist. 96. &c.

⁽b) Instead of Αλλ, αι Βυλευτης, the true Reading, perhaps, is, Αλλα ει Βυλευτης; and it is translated accordingly.

while you follow their Practices, and hold their Principles, do you talk to us of the Doetrines of Zeno and Socrates? Why do not you throw away, to as great a Distance as posfible, those Ornaments which belong to others, and which you have nothing to do with? What elfe do the Epicureans defire, than to fleep without Hindrance, and rife (i) without Compulsion; and, when they are got up, to yawn at their leifure, and wash their Face; then write and read what they please; then prate about some Trifle or other, and be applauded by their Friends, whatever they fay: then go out for a Walk; and, after they have taken a Turn, bathe; and then eat; and then to Bed: in what manner they fpend their Timethere, why should one say? For it is easily guessed. Come: now do you also tell me, what Course of Life you defire to lead, who are a Zealot for Truth, and Diogenes, and Socrates? What would you do at Athens? These very same Things? Why then do you call yourfelf a Stoic? They who falfely pretend to the Roman Citizenship, are punished severely: and must Those be dismis'd with Impunity, who falsely claim fo great a Thing, and fo venerable a Title, as you do? Or is this impossible; and is there not a divine, and powerful, and inevitable Law, which exacts the greatest Punishments from those, who are guilty of the greatest Offences? For what favs this Law? Let him who claims what doth not belong to him, be arrogant, be vain-glorious, be base, be a Slave: let him grieve, let him envy, let him pity; and, in a word, let him be unhappy, let him lament.

⁽i) The Conjecture of Wolfius (araginess) is a good one; and the Translation hath followed it.

§. 3. (k) What then! would you have me pay my Court to fuch a one? Would you have me frequent his Door?

If Reason requires it, for your Country, for your Relations, for Mankind, why should you not go? You are not ashamed to go to the Door of a Shoemaker, when you want Shoes; nor of a Gardener, when you want Lettuce. Why then of the Rich, when you have some similar Want?

Ay: but I am not struck with Awe of a Shoemaker.

Nor of a rich Man neither.

I need not flatter a Gardener.

Nor a rich Man neither.

How then shall I get what I want?

Why, do I bid you go, in Expectation of getting it? No: only that you may do what becomes yourfelf.

Why then, after all, should I go?

That you may have gone; that you may have discharged the Duties of a Citizen, of a Brother, of a Friend. And, after all, remember, that you are going to a Shoemaker, to a Gardener, who hath not the Power of any thing great or respectable, though he should sell it ever so dear. You are going to buy Lettuces. They are sold for a Peny, not for a Talent. So here too, the Matter is worth going to his Door about. Well: I will go. It is worth talking with him about (/). Well: I will talk with him.

Ay:

⁽k) What follows hath no Connexion with what immediately preceded; but belongs to the general Subject of the Chapter.

⁽¹⁾ The Change of the Persons in these Discourses is often so sudden, that it is difficult to discover the Speaker; and one can judge only from the general Sense. The Translator hath endeavoured to give this Passage.

Ay: but one must kis his Hand too, and cajole him with Praise.

Away with you. That is worth a Talent. It is not expedient for myfelf, nor my Country, nor my fellow Citizens, nor my Friends, to deftroy the good Citizen, and the Friend Jin my own Character.]

But one shall appear not to have set heartily about the Business, if one sails.

What, have you forgot again, why you went? Do not you know, that a wife and good Man doth nothing for Appearance; but for the Sake of having acted well?

What Advantage then is it to him, to have acted well?
What Advantage is it to one, who writes the Name of Dion as he ought? The having writ it.

Is there no Reward then?

Why: do you feek any greater Reward, for a good Man, than the doing what is fair and just? And yet, at Olympia, you desire nothing else; but think it enough, to be crowned Victor. Doth it appear to you so small and worthless a Thing, to be fair, good, and happy? Besides: being introduced by God into this great City, [the World,] and bound to discharge, at this time, the Duties of a Man, do you still want Nurses and a Mamma; and are you (m) moved and effeminated by the Tears of poor soolish Women? Are you thus determined never to cease being an Insant? Do not you the Turn which feems most agreeable to the Contents, without adhering very literally to the several Words in the Greek. Epičletus, in this Paragraph, personates the Scholar, whom he is exhorting to visit a great Man.

⁽m) This refers to a former Part of the Chapter.

know, that he who acts like a Child, the older he is, so much is he the more ridiculous?

§. 4. (n) Did you never vifit any one at Athens, at his own House?

Yes: whomfoever I pleafed.

Why: now you are here, be willing to vifit this Perfon, and you will ftill fee whom you pleafe; only let it be without Meanneifs, without Defire, or Averfion, and your Affairs will go well: but their going well, or not, doth not confift in going to the Houfe, and standing at the Door, or not; but lies within, in your own Principles; when you have acquired a Contempt of Things independent on Choice, and esteem none of them your own; but that what belongs to you is only to judge, to think, to exert your Pursuits, your Defires, and Aversions, right. What surther Room is there, after this, for Flattery, for Meannes? Why do you still long for the Quiet you enjoyed there (a); for Places samiliar to you? Stay a little, and these will become samiliar to you, in their Turn; and then, if you are so mean-spirited, weep and lament again at leaving these.

How then am I to preserve an affectionate Temper?

As becomes a noble-fpirited and happy Perfon, For Reafon will never tell you to be dejected, and broken-hearted; or to depend on another; or to reproach either God, or Man. Be affectionate in fuch a manner as to observe all ⁽n) Here, what was faid before, about going to a great Man, is again refumed.

⁽o) At Athens.

this. But if, from Affection, as you call it, you are to be a Slave, and a Wretch, it is not worth your while to be affectionate. And what reftrains you from loving any one as a Mortal, as a Person who may be obliged to quit you? Pray did not Socrates love his own Children? But it was as became one, who was free, and mindful that his first Duty was, to gain the Love of the Gods. Hence he violated no Part of the Character of a good Man, either in his Defence, or in fixing a Penalty on himself (p). Nor yet before, when he was a Senator, or a Soldier. But we make use of every Pretence to be mean-spirited; some, on the Account of a Child; fome, of a Mother; and fome, of a Brother. But it is not fit to be unhappy, on the Account of any one; but happy, on the Account of All; and chiefly of God, who hath constituted us for this Purpose. What! did Diogenes love nobody; who was fo gentle, and benevolent, as chearfully to undergo fo many Pains and Miseries of Body, for the common Good of Mankind? Yes: he did love them: but how? As became a Minister of Yove; at once taking care of Men, and obedient to God. Hence the whole Earth, not any particular ⁽ρ) It was the Cuftom at Athens, in Cafes where no fixed Punifiment was appointed by the Law, before the Judges gave Sentence, to after the Criminal himfelf, what Penalty he thought he deferved. Secretes refused either to comply with this Form himfelf, or fuffer any of his Friends to do it for him; alleging, that the naming a Penalty was a Confedition of Guilt. When the Judges therefore afked him, what Penalty he thought he deferved, he answered, "The highest Honours, and Rewards; and to be maintained in the Prytaneum, at the public Expence." An Answer which so extremely irritated his Judges, that they immediately condemned him to Death. Pa.vio. Cureno.

Place, was his Country. And, when he was taken Captive, he did not long for Athens, and his Friends and Acquaintance there; but made himself acquainted with the Pirates, and endeavoured to reform them: and, when he was at last fold, he lived at Corinth, just as before at Athens: and, if he had gone to the Perrhæbeans (q), he would have been exactly the fame. Thus is Freedom acquired. Hence he used to fav. " Ever fince Antisthenes made me free (r), I have ceased to " be a Slave." How did he make him free? Hear what he fays. "He taught me what was my own, and what not. "An Estate is not my own. Kindred, Domestics, Friends. " Reputation, familiar Places, Manner of Life, all belong " to another." " What is your own then?" " The Use " of the Appearances of Things. He showed me, that I " have this, not subject to Restraint, or Compulsion: no " one can hinder or force me to use them, any otherwise "than I please. Who then, after this, hath any Power " over me? Philip, or Alexander, or Perdiccas, or the " Perfian King? Whence should they have it? For he " that is to be fubdued by Man, must, long before, be sub-" dued by Things. He therefore, of whom neither Plea-" fure, nor Pain, nor Fame, nor Riches, can get the better; " and who is able, whenever he thinks fit, to throw away " his whole Body, with Contempt, and depart, whose Slave " can he ever be? To whom is he fubject?" But if Diogenes had taken Pleafure in living at Athens, and had been ⁽q) A People towards the Extremity of Greece.

⁽r) Diogenes was the Disciple of Antiflbenes. Compare what Diogenes fays of Antiflbenes making him free, with John viii. 32----36. Subduced fubdued by that Manner of Life, his Affairs would have been at every one's Disposal; and whoever was stronger, would have had the Power of grieving him. How would he have flattered the Pirates, think you, to make them fell him to fome Athenian, that he might fee again the fine Piraum, the long Walls, and the Citadel? How would you fee them, you Wretch? As a dispirited Slave. And what Good would that do you?---". No: but free."---Show in what manner, free. See, fomebody lays hold on you; whoever takes you away from your usual Manner of Life, and says, "You " are my Slave: for it is in my Power to restrain you from " living as you like. It is in my Power to (s) afflict and " humble you. Whenever I please, you may be chearful " again; and fet out, elated, for Athens." What do you fay to him who thus enflaves you? What Method will you find of getting free? Or dare you not so much as look up at him; but, without making many Words, fupplicate to be difmiffed? You ought to go to Prison, Man, with Alacrity, with Speed, and to precede your Conductors. Inflead of this, do you regret living at Rome, and long for Greece? And, when you must die, will you then too come crying to us, that you shall no more fee Athens, nor walk in the Lycaum? Have you travelled for this? Is it for this, that you have been feeking for fomel ody to do you Good? What Good? That you may the more eafily folve Syllogisms, and manage hypothetical Arguments? And is it for this Reason, you left your Brother, your Country, your Friends, your Family, that you might carry back fuch Improvements as these? So that you did not travel for Conftancy, nor for Tranquillity; nor that, fecured from Harm, you might complain of no one, accuse no one: that no one might injure you; and that thus you might preserve your relative Duties, without Impediment. You have made a fine Traffic of it, to carry home hypothetical Arguments, and convertible Propositions! If you please too, fit in the Market, and cry them for Sale, as Mountebanks do their Medicines. Why will you not rather deny, that you know even what you have learned; for fear of bringing a Scandal upon Theorems, as useless? What Harm hath Philosophy done you? In what hath Chrysppus injured you, that you should give a Proof, by your Actions, that Philosophy is of no Value? Had you not Evils enough at home? How many Causes for Grief and Lamentation had you there, even if you had not travelled? But you have added more; and, if you ever get any new Acquaintance and Friends, you will find fresh Causes for groaning; and, in like manner, if you attach yourself to any other Country. To what Purpose therefore do you live? To heap Sorrow upon Sorrow, to make you wretched? And then you tell me this is Affection. What Affection, Man? If it be good, it is not the Cause of any Ill: if ill, I will have nothing to do with it. I was born for my own Good; not Ill.

⁽s) Instead of arearas, the Sense seems to require arear; and it is so translated.

The Discourses of Book III.

§. 5. What then is the proper Exercife in this Cafe? First, the highest, and principal, and obvious, as it were at your Door, is, that when you attach yourself to any thing, it may not be as to what cannot be taken away.

But as to what?

324

As to fomething of the fame kind with an earthen Pot. or a glass Cup; that, when it happens to be broken, you may remember not to be troubled (t). So here too: when you kifs your Child, or your Brother, or your Friend, never intirely give way to the Appearance, nor fuffer the Pleafure to diffuse itself as far as it will; but curb it, restrain it, like those who stand behind triumphant Victors, and remind them, that they are Men. Do you likewise remind yourfelf, that you love what is mortal; that you love what is not your own. It is allowed you for the prefent, not irrevocably, nor for ever; but as a Fig, or a Bunch of Grapes, in the appointed Season. If you long for these in Winter, you are a Fool. So, if you long for your Son, or your Friend, when he is not allowed you, know, you wish for Figs in Winter. For as Winter is to a Fig, fo is every Accident in the Universe, to those Things which are taken away by it. In the next place, represent to yourself Appearances contrary to (u) whatever Objects give you Pleafure. What Harm is there, while you are kiffing your Child, to fay foftly, " To-morrow you will die:" and fo to your Friend, "To-morrow either you or I shall go away, and " we shall see each other no more."

But these Sayings are ominous.

And so are some Incantations: but, because they are useful, I do not mind it; only let them be useful. But do you call any thing ominous, except what is the Signification of some III? Cowardice is ominous; Mean-spiritedness is ominous; Lamentation, Grief, Want of Shame. These are Words of bad Omen; and yet we ought not to be scrupulous of using them, as a Guard against the Things they mean. But do you tell me, that a Word is ominous which is significant of any thing natural? Say too, that it is ominous, for Ears of Corn to be reaped; for this signifies the Destruction of the Corn; but not of the World. Say too, that the Fall of the Leaf is ominous; and that a candied Mass-should be produced from Figs; and Raisins, from Grapes. For all these are changes from a former, into another State; not a Destruction, but a certain appointed Occonomy and Administration. Such is Absence, a small Change: such is Death, a greater Change: not from what now is nothing, but to what now is not.

⁽t) See Enchiridion, c. iii.

⁽u) The Translation here follows Mr. Upton's Conjecture. Er aurioi, &c.

(w) What then, shall I be no more?

You will be: but Jyou will be] fome thing elfe, of which, at present, the World hath no Need: for even you were not produced when you pleased, but when the World had Need [of you.] Hence a wise and good Man, mindful who he is, and whence he came, and by whom he was produced, is attentive only how he may fill his Post regularly, and dutifully to God. "Is it thy Pleasure I should any longer continue in being? "I will continue, free, spirited, agreeably to thy Pleasure: "for Thou hast made me incapable of Restraint, in what "is my own. But hast Thou no farther Use for me? Fare

⁽v) The Translation follows Mr. Upton's Transposition of over. The Meaning of the Passage is, that, though the personal Existence is dissolved, and destroyed by Death, the Substance, out of which it was produced, remains, under some other Form; which was the Stoic Doctrine.

" thou well! I have staid thus long for thy Sake alone, " and no other; and now I depart in Obedience to Thee." --- " How do you depart?"--- " Again: agreeably to thy " Pleafure; as free, as thy Servant, as one fenfible of thy " Commands, and thy Prohibitions. But, while I am em-" ployed in thy Service, what wouldft Thou have me be? " A Prince, or a private Man; a Senator, or a Plebeian; " a Soldier, or a General; a Preceptor, or the Mafter of a " Family? Whatever Post or Rank Thou shalt assign me, " like Socrates, I will die a thousand times rather than " defert it. Where wouldft Thou have me be? At Rome, " or at Athens; at Thebes, or at Gyaros? Only remember " me there. If Thou shalt fend me, where Men cannot live " conformably to Nature, I do not depart from thence (x), " in Disobedience to thy Will; but as receiving my Signal " of Retreat from Thee. I do not defert Thee: Heaven " forbid! but I perceive Thou hast no Use for me. If a " Life conformable to Nature be granted, I will feek no " other Place, but that in which I am; nor any other Com-" pany, but those with whom I am."

§. 6. Let these Things be ready at hand, Night and Day. These Things write; these Things read; of these Things talk both to yourself and others. [Ask them,] "Have you "any Assistance to give me for this Purpose?" And again, go and ask another, and another. Then, if any of those Things should happen that are said to be against our Will, immediately this will be a Relief to you; in the first place, ⁽x) Απείθων. Wolfius.

that it was not unexpected. For it is a great Matter, upon all Occasions, to [be able to] fay (y), " I knew that I begot " one born to die." Thus do you fay too; " I knew that " I was liable to die, to remove, to be exiled, to be impri-" foned." If afterwards you turn to yourfelf, and feek from what Quarter the Event proceeds, you will prefently recollect: "It is from Things independent on Choice; not from " what is my own. What then is it to me?" Then, farther (which is the chief): Who fent it? The Commander, the General, the City, the Law of the City? Give it me then; for I must always obey the Law in all Things. Farther yet: when any Appearance molefts you (for [to prevent] that, is not in your Power,) strive against it; and, by Reason, conquer it. Do not fuffer it to gain Strength, nor to lead you on to Consequences; and represent what, and how, it pleases. If you are at Gyaros, do not represent to yourself the Manner of Living at Rome; how many Pleasures you used to find there, and how many would attend your Return: but be intent on this Point; How he, who lives at Gyaros, may live with Spirit and Comfort, at Gyaros. And, if you are at Rome, do not represent to yourself the Manner of Living at Athens: but confider only, how you ought to live where you are. Laftly: to all other Pleasures oppose that of being conscious, that you are obeying God; and performing, not in Word, but in Deed, the Duty of a wife and good Man. How great a Thing is it to be able to fay to yourfelf, "What " others are now folemnly arguing in the Schools, and feem ⁽y) This was faid by Xenophon, when News was brought him, that his Son Gryllus was killed in a Battle.

" to carry beyond Probability, this I am [actually] per-" forming. They are fitting and expatiating upon my Vir-" tues, and disputing about me, and celebrating me. Jupiter " hath been pleafed to let me receive a Demonstration of " this from myself; and indeed that He may know, whether " he hath a Soldier, a Citizen, fuch as he should be, and " to produce me as a Witness to other Men, concerning " Things independent on Choice. See that your Fears were " vain, your Appetites vain. Seek not Good from without: " feek it in yourfelves, or you will never find it. For "this Reafon, he now brings me hither, now fends me " thither; shows me to Mankind, poor, without Authority, " fick; fends me to Gyaros; leads me to Prison: not that " he hates me: Heaven forbid! For who hates the best of " his Servants? Nor that he neglects me: for he doth not " neglect any one of the fmalleft (z) Things: but to exer-" cife me, and make use of me as a Witness to others. " Appointed to fuch a Service, do I still care where I " am, or with whom, or what is faid of me, instead of " being wholly attentive to God, and to his Orders and " Commands?"

§. 7. Having these Things always at hand, and practising them by yourself, and making them ready for Use, you will never want any one to comfort and strengthen you. For Shame doth not confist in not having any thing to eat, but, in not having Reason enough to exempt you from Fear and ⁽x) Compare this with the Defeription of the universal Care of Providence, Matth. x. 29, 30. and the Occasion on which it was introduced.

Sorrow. But, if you once acquire that Exemption, will a Tyrant, or his Guards, or Courtiers, be any thing to you? Will any Defination of Offices, or they who offer Sacrifices in the Capitol, on being admitted into the Emperor's Train, give you Uneafiness, who have received so great a Command from Jupiter? Only, do not make a Parade of it, nor grow insolent upon it. But show it by your Actions: and, though no one should perceive it, be content, that you are well, and happy.

CHAPTER XXV.

Concerning Those who desist from their Purpose.

§ 1. CONSIDER which of the Things, which you at first proposed to yourself, you have retained, which not, and how; which give you Pleafure, which Pain, in the Reflection; and, if possible, recover yourfelf, where you have failed. For the Champions, in this greatest of Combats, must not grow weary; but are even contentedly to bear Whipping. For this is no Combat of Wreftling or Boxing; where both he who fucceeds, and he who doth not succeed, may possibly be of very great Worth, or of little; indeed may be very fortunate, or very miserable: but the Combat is for good Fortune and Happiness itself. What is the Case then? Here, even if we have renounced the Contest, no one restrains us from renewing it; nor need we wait for another Four Years, for the Return of another Olympiad; but recollecting, and recovering yourfelf, and returning with the same Zeal, you may renew it immediately: and even if you should again yield, you may again begin: and, if you once get the Victory, you become like one who hath never yielded. Only do not begin, from a Habit of this, to do it with Pleafure, and then, like Quails that have fled the Pit (a), go about as if you were a brave Champion, though you have been conquered, all the Games round (b),---" The " Appearance of a pretty Girl conquers me." What then? " Have not I been conquered before? I have a mind to " rail at fomebody. Well: have not I railed before?"----You talk to us just as if you had come off unhurt. Like one that should fay to his Physician, who had forbidden him to bathe, "Why, did not I bathe before?" Suppose the Physician should answer him, "Well: and what was the " Confequence of your Bathing? Were not you feverish? " Had not you the Head-ach?" So, when you before railed at fomebody, did not you act like an ill-natured Person; like an impertinent one? Have not you fed this Habit of yours, by Actions familiar to it? When you were conquered by a pretty Girl, did you come off with Impunity? Why then do you talk of what you have done before? You ought to remember it, I think, as Slaves do Whipping; fo as to refrain from the same Faults .--- "But the Case is unlike: " for there it is Pain that causes the Remembrance: but " what is the Pain, what the Punishment, of my committing ⁽a) It was a Sport among the Greeks, to put Quails in a circular Space, like our Cockpits, and use various Ways of trying their Courage. If the Quail run away out of the Pit, its Master lost.

⁽b) An Allufion to the Pythian, Ifthmian, Nemean, and Olympic Games. The Perfons who were victorious in all thefe, were diffinguished by a particular Name; fignifying, that they had been Conquerors through the whole Circle of the Games. Upron.

"Faults? For when was I ever habituated [by any Suffering] to avoid acting ill?"----Therefore the Pains of Experience, whether we will, or not, have their Ufe.

CHAPTER XXVI.

Concerning Those who are in Dread of Want.

§. r. (a) A RE not you assumed to be more fearful and mean-spirited than sugitive Slaves? To what Estates, to what Servants, do they trust, when they run away, and leave their Masters? Do not they, after carrying off a little with them for the First Days, travel over Land and Sea, contriving first one, then another Method of getting Food? And what Fugitive ever died with Hunger? Butyou tremble, and lie awake by Night, for fear you should want Necessaries. Wretch! are you so blind? Do not you see the Way where the Want of Necessaries leads?

Why, where doth it lead?

Where a Fever, where even a Stone falling on you, leads—to Death. Have not you yourfelf then, often faid this to your. Companions? Have not you read, have not you written, many Things of this kind? And how often have you arrogantly boafted, that you are eafy with regard to Death?

Ay: but my Family too will flarve with Hunger.

What then? Doth their Hunger lead any other Way thanyours? Is there not the same Descent? The same State below? Will you not then, in every Want and Necessity, look with Confidence there, where even the most Rich and Powerful, and Kings and Tyrants themselves must descend? You indeed, hungry perhaps; and they, burst with Indigestion and Drunkennes? What Beggar have you almost ever seen, who did not live to Old-age, nay to extreme Old-age? Chilled with Cold Day and Night, lying on the Ground, and eating only what is barely necessary, they come nearly to an Impossibility of Dying.—Cannot you write? Cannot you keep a School? Cannot you be a Watehman at some-body's Door?

⁽a) Compare this Chapter with the beautiful and affecting Discourses of our Saviour on the same Subject, Matth. vi. 25---34. Luke xii. 22---30.

But it is shameful to come to this Necessity.

First therefore, learn what Things are shameful; and then tell us, you are a Philosopher: but at present, do not bear, that even any one else should call you so. Is that fhameful to you, which is not your own Act? Of which you are not the Cause? Which hath happened to you by Accident, like a Fever, or the Head-ach? If your Parents were poor, or left others their Heirs, or, though they are living, do not affift you, are these Things shameful for you? Is this what you have learned from the Philosophers? Have you never heard, that what is shameful is blameable; and what is blameable deserves to be blamed? Whom do you blame for an Action not his own, which he hath not done himfelf? Did you then make your Father fuch a one [as he is]? Or is it in your Power to mend him? Is that permitted you? What then, must you defire what is not permitted; and, when you fail of it, be ashamed? Are you thus habituated, even when you are fludying Philosophy, to depend upon others, and to hope nothing from yourfelf? Sigh then, and groan, and cat in Fear that you shall have no Victuals

To-morrow. Tremble, left your Servants should rob you. or run away from you, or die. Thus live on, without ceasing, whoever you are, who have applied to Philosophy in Name only; and, as much as in you lies, have difgraced its Theorems, by showing, that they are unprofitable and useless to those who take up the Profession of them. You have never made Constancy, Tranquillity, and Apathy, the Object of your Defires; have attended on no one upon this Account; but on many, for the Sake of Syllogisms: nor have ever, by yourself, examined any one of these Appearances. "Can "I bear this, or can I not bear it? What remains for me " to do?" But, as if all your Affairs went fafe and well, you have dwelt upon the Third Class (b), that of Security from Failure; that you may never fail---Of what?---Fear, Mean-spiritedness, Admiration of Riches, an unaccomplished Defire, and unfuccefsful Aversion. These are the Things which you have been labouring to fecure. Ought you not first to have acquired fomething by the Use of Reason, and then to have provided Security for that? Whom did you ever fee building a Round of Battlements, without placing them upon a Wall? And what Porter is ever fet where there is no Door? But you fudy. Can you flow me what you fludy?

Not to be shaken by Sophistry.

Shaken from what? Show me first, what you have in your Custody; what you measure, or what you weigh; and then accordingly show me the Balance, or the Bushel. What signifies it to go on, ever so long, measuring Dust? Ought you not to show, what makes Men happy, what makes their ⁽b) Sec Introduction, §. 6.

Affairs proceed as they wish? How we may blame no one, accuse no one; how acquiesce in the Administration of the Universe? Show me these Things. "See, I do show them," fay you; " I will folve Syllogisms to you."---This is the Meafure, Wretch, and not the Thing meafured. you now pay the Penalty due for neglecting Philosophy. You tremble, you lie awake, you advise with every body; and if what you are advised to, doth not please every body, you think that you have been ill-advised. Then you dread Hunger, as you fancy: but it is not Hunger that you dread; but you are afraid, that you shall not have a Cook; that you shall not have another Person for a Butler; another, topull off your Shoes; a fourth, to dress you; others, to rub you; others, to follow you: that, when you have undreffed yourfelf in the Bathing-room, and stretched yourfelf out like those who are crucified, you may be rubbed here and there; and the Person who presides over these Operations may stand by, and fay, " Come this Way; give your Side; take hold " on his Head; turn your Shoulder:" and that, when you are returned home from the Bath, you may bawl out, "Doth " nobody bring any thing to eat?" And then, " Take " away; wipe the Table." This is your Dread, that you shall not be able to lead the Life of a fick Man. learn the Life of those in Health: how Slaves live; how, Labourers; how, those who are genuine Philosophers; how Socrates lived, even with a Wife and Children; how, Dio. genes; how, Cleanthes (c), at once studying and drawing Water.

⁽c) Cleanthes was a Stoic Philosopher, the Disciple and Succetion of Zeno. He used to draw Water for his Livelihood all Night, and study Water. If these are the Things you would have, you will have them every-where, and with a fearless Confidence.

In what?

In the only Thing that can be confided in; what is fure, incapable of being reftrained, or taken away; your own Choice.

§. 2. But why have you contrived to make yourfelf fo useless, and good for nothing, that nobody will receive you into their House; nobody take care of you: but though, if any found ufeful Veffel was thrown out of Doors, whoever finds it, will take it up, and efteem it as a Gain; yet nobody will take up you; but every body esteem you a Loss. What, cannot you fo much as perform the Office of a Dog, or a Cock? Why then do you wish to live any longer, if you are so worthless? Doth any good Man fear, that Food should fail him? It doth not fail the Blind; it doth not fail the Lame. Shall it fail a good Man? A Paymaster is not wanting to a Soldier, or to a Labourer, or to a Shoemaker; and shall one be wanting to a good Man? Is God so negligent of his own Institutions; of his Servants; of his Witnesses, whom alone he makes use of as Examples to the Uninstructed. both that He is; and that He administers the Universe rightly; and doth not neglect human Affairs; and that no Evil happens to a good Man, either living or dead? What then is the all Day. He was so poor, that for Want of proper Materials, he used to write down what he had heard from his Master Zeno, on Tiles, and Pieces of Bone. The Physicians ordered him, for a Swelling in his Gums, to abstain two Days from Food; with which he complied. When he was recovered, they gave him Leave to return to his usual Diet; which he refused; and, saying he was now far advanced on his Journey, starved himself to Death. Diog. LARKT.

Case when he doth not bestow Food? What else, than that, like a good General, he hath made me a Signal of Retreat? I obey, I follow; speaking well of my Leader, praising his Works. For I came when it feemed good to him; and again, when it feems good to him, I depart; and in Life it was my Bufiness to praise God, both by myself, to each particular Person, and to the World. Doth he not grant me many Things? Doth he not grant me Affluence? It is not his Pleafure, that I should live luxuriously: for he did not grant that even to Hercules, his own Son; but another (d) reigned over Argos and Mycene; while he lived fubject to Command, laboured, and was exercifed. And Eurystheus was just what he was; neither King of Argos, nor Mycene; not being indeed King of himfelf. But Hercules was Ruler and Governor of the whole Earth and Seas; the Expeller of Lawleffness and Injustice; the Introducer of Justice and Sanctity. And this he effected naked and alone. Again: when Ulysses was shipwrecked, and cast away, did his helpless Condition at all deject him? Did it break his Spirit? No: But how did he go to Nauficaa, and her Attendants, to ask those Necessaries which it seems most fhameful to beg from another?

As the fierce Lion, on the Mountain bred, Confiding in his Strength -----

Confiding in what? Not in Glory, nor in Riches, nor in Dominion; but in his own Strength: that is, in his Principles, concerning what Things are in our own Power; what, not. For thefe alone are what render us free, render us incapable of Reftraint; raise the Head of the Dejected, and make them look, with unaverted Eyes, full in the Face of the Rich, and of the Tyrants: and this was the Gift of the Philosopher (e). But you will not set out with Confidence; but trembling, about such Trisles as Clothes and Plate. Wretch! have you thus wasted your Time till now?

338 The Discourses of, &c. Book III.

But what, if I should be fick?

You will be fick as you ought.

Who will take care of me?

God: your Friends.

I shall lie in a hard Bed. But like a Man.

I shall not have a convenient Room.

You will be fick in an inconvenient one then.

Who will provide Victuals for me?

They who provide for others too: you will be fick like Manes(f).

But, befides, what will be the Conclusion of my Sickness? Any other than Death?

Why, do not you know then, that the Origin of all-human Evils, and of Mean-spiritedness, and Cowardice, is not Death; but rather the Fear of Death? Fortify yourself therefore against this. Hither let all your Discourses, Readings, Exercises, tend. And then you will know, that thus alone are Men made free.

⁽e) The Senfe would be better, if we read της φιλοσοφίας, of Philosophy.
(f) The Name of a Slave, particularly of a Slave who once belonged to Diegenes: and perhaps this Expression alludes to some Story about him, which is now unknown.

THE

DISCOURSES

EPICTETUS

BOOK IV.

CHAPTER I.

Of Freedom.

E is free, who lives as he likes; who is not fubiect either to Compulsion, to Reftraint, or to Violence: whose Pursuits are unhindered, his Defires fuccefsful, his Averfions unincurred. Who then would wish to lead a wrong Course of Life ?---" No one." ----Who would live deceived, prone to miftake, unjuft, diffolute, discontented, dejected?----" No one."----No wicked Man then lives as he likes; therefore neither is he free. And who would live in Sorrow, Fear, Envy, Pity; with disappointed Defires, and incurred Aversions?---" No " onc." X x 2

The Discourses of Book IV.

340

"one."—Do we then find any of the Wicked exempt from Sorrow, Fear, disappointed Defires, incurred Aversions?—Not one."—Consequently then, not free (a).

§. 2. If a Person who hath been twice Consul should hear this, provided you add, "but you are a wise Man; this is "nothing to you;" he will forgive you. But if you tell him the Truth; that, in point of Slavery, he doth not differ from those who have been thrice sold, what must you expect, but to be beaten? "For how, says he, am I a Slave? My Father "was free, my Mother free (b). Besides, I am a Senator too, and the Friend of Cassar; and have been twice Consul; and the Friend of Cassar; The first place, most worthy Sir, perhaps your Father too was a Slave of the same kind; and your Mother, and your Grandsather, and all your Ancestors successively. But even if they were ever so free, what is that to you? For what, if they were of a generous, you, of a mean Spirit: they, brave; and you, a Coward: they, sober; and you, dissolute?

§. 3. And, "What, fays he, is this towards being a "Slave?" (c)—Do you think it nothing towards being a Slave, to act againft your Will? Compelled, and lamenting?——Be it fo. But who can compell me, but the Mafter of "All, Coofar?"——By your own Confession then, you have ⁽a) Whosoever committeth Sin, is the Servant of Sin. John viii. 34.

⁽b) They answered him, We be Abraham's Seed, and were never in Bondage to any Man: how sayest thou, Ye shall be made free? John viii. 33.

⁽c) Mr. Upton's Copy transposes many Pages of this Chapter to their right Place; which, in others, were joined to the last Chapter of the Third Book.

one Master: and let not his being, as you say, Master of All, give you any Comfort; but know, that you are a Slave in a great Family: Thus the Nicopolitans too, frequently cryout, "By the Life of Caesar, we are free!"

§. 4. For the present, however, if you please, we will let Cæfar alone. But tell me this. Have you never been in Love with any one, either of a fervile or liberal Condition? --- "Why, what is that to the being either a Slave, or " free?"----Was you never commanded any thing by your Mistress, that you did not chuse? Have you never flattered your Slave? Have you never kiffed her Feet? And yet, if you were commanded to kiss Cafar's Feet, you would think it an Outrage, and an Excess of Tyranny. Have you never gone out by Night, where you did not chuse? Have you never spent more than you chose? Have not you fometimes uttered your Words with Sighs and Groans? Born to be reviled, and shut out of Doors? But, if you are ashamed to confess your own Follies, see what Thrafonides (d) fays, and doth; who, after having fought more Battles perhaps than you, went out by Night, when Geta (e) would not dare to go: nay, had he been compelled to it by him, would have gone roaring, and lamenting his bitter Servitude. And what doth [this Mafter of his] fay afterwards? " A forry Girl hath enflaved me, whom no Enemy " ever enflaved." --- (Wretch! to be the Slave of a Girl, and a forry Girl too! Why then do you still call yourself free?

⁽d) A Character in one of the Comedies of Menander, called The Hated Lover.

⁽e) The Name of a Slave.

Why do you boast your military Expeditions?)—Then he calls for a Sword, and is angry with the Person, who, out of Kindness, denies it; and sends Prefents to her who hates him; and begs, and weeps, and then again is elated on every little Success. But how is he elated even then? Is it so, as neither passionately to desire or fear?

- §. 5. Confider, in Animals, what is our Idea of Freedom. Some keep tame Lions, and feed, and even carry them about with them: and who will fay, that any fuch Lion is free? Nay, doth he not live the more flavishly, the more he lives at ease? And who, that had Sense and Reason, would wish to be one of those Lions? Again: How much do Birds, which are taken and kept in a Cage, fuffer, by trying to fly away? Nay, some of them starve with Hunger, rather than undergo fuch a Life: then, as many of them as are faved, it is fcarcely, and with Difficulty, and in a pining Condition; and the Moment they find any Hole, out they hop. Such a Defire have they of natural Freedom, and to be at their own Disposal, and unrestrained. And what Harm (f) " doth this Confinement do you?"---" What fay you? I " was born to fly where I pleafe, to live in the open Air, " to fing when I pleafe. You deprive me of all this, and " fay, What Harm doth it do you?"
- §. 6. Hence we will allow those only to be free, who do not endure Captivity; but, as soon as they are taken, die, and cscape. Thus Diogenes some-where says, That the only Way to Freedom is to die with Ease. And he writes to the ⁽f) Wolfius, very rightly, for nahor reads nanor.

Persian King; "You can no more enslave the Athenians, "than you can Fish."—"How? What, shall not I take "them?"—"If you do take them, says he, they will be leave you, and be gone, like Fish. For take a Fish, and it dies. And, if the Athenians too die, as soon as you have taken them, of what Use are your warlike Preparations?"——This is the Voice of a free Man, who had examined the Matter in earnest; and, as it might be expected, found it out. But, if you seek it where it is not, what wonder, if you never find it?

§. 7. A Slave wishes to be immediately set free. Think you it is because he is desirous to pay his Fine to the Officer (g)? No: but because he fancies, that, for want of acquiring his Freedom, he hath hitherto lived under Restraint, and unprosperously. "If I am once set free, says he, it is all "Prosperity: I care for no one; I speak to All, as their Equal, and on a Level with them. I go where I will, I come when (b), and how I will." He is at last made free; and presently, having no-where to eat, he seeks whom he may flatter, with whom he may fup. He then either submits to the basest and most infamous Prostitution; and, if he can obtain Admission to some great Man's Table, falls into a Slavery much worse than the former: or, if the Creature, void of Sense and right Taste, happens to acquire an affluent Fortune, he doats upon some Girl, laments, and is ⁽g) See p. 113. Note d.

⁽b) It feems necessary, that over and orou should be orar and or and independent and they are so translated.

unhappy, and wishes for Slavery again. " For what Harm " did it do me? Another clothed me, another shod me, " another fed me, another took care of me when I was fick. " It was but in a few Things, by way of Return, I used to " ferve him. But now, miferable Wretch! what do I fuffer, " in being a Slave to many, instead of one! Yet, if I can " obtain the Equestrian Rings (i), I shall live with the " utmost Prosperity and Happiness." In order to obtain them, he first suffers what he deserves; and, as soon as he hath obtained them, it is all the fame again. " But then, " fays he, if I do but get a military Command, I shall be " delivered from all my Troubles." He gets a military Command. He fuffers as much as the vileft Rogue of a Slave: and, nevertheless, he asks for a second Command, and a third: and, when he hath put the finishing Hand, and is made a Senator, then he is a Slave indeed. When he comes into the Assembly, it is then that he undergoes his finest and most splendid Slavery.

⁽i) A gold Ring was the peculiar Ornament of the Roman Knights, by which they were diffinguished from the Plebeians. UPTON.

⁽k) Something is here wanting in the Original.

adapt his Pre-conceptions right. Another, that he is poor: another, that he hath a harsh Father and Mother: another, that he is not in the good Graces of Cafar. This is nothing elfe, but not understanding how to adapt our Pre-conceptions. For, who hath not a Pre-conception of Evil, that it is hurtful? That it is to be avoided? That it is by all means to be prudently guarded against? One Pre-conception doth not contradict another, except when it comes to be adapted. What then is this Evil, thus hartful, and to be avoided? " Not " to be the Friend of Cæsar," faith one. He is gone; he fails in the adapting; he is embarraffed; he feeks what is nothing to the Purpole. For, if he gets to be Cæfar's Friend, he is never the less distant from what he fought. For what is it that every Man feeks? To be fecure, to be happy, to do what he pleases without Restraint, and without Compulsion. When he becomes the Friend of Cæfar then, doth he cease to be restrained? To be compell'd? Is he secure? Is he happy? Whom shall he ask? Whom can we better credit than this very Man, who hath been his Friend? Come forth and tell us, whether you fleep more quietly now, or before you were the Friend of Cafar? You prefently hear him cry, " Leave off, for Heaven's fake, and do not infult " me. You know not the Miferies I fuffer: there is no Sleep " for me; but one comes, and faith, that Cafar is already " awake; another, that he is just going out. Then follow " Perturbations, then Cares." Well: and when did you use to fup more pleafantly, formerly, or now? Hear what he fays about this too. When he is not invited, he is distracted: and if he is, he fups like a Slave with his Mafter, folicitous all the while, not to fay or do any thing foolith. And whar think think you? Is he afraid of being whipped, like a Slave? How can he hope to escape so well? No: but as becomes fo great a Man, *Cæsar's Friend, of losing his Head.——And when did you bathe more quietly; when did you perform your Exercises more at your leisure; in short, which Life would you rather wish to live, your present, or the former? I could swear, there is no one so stupid and insensible (I), as not to deplore his Miseries, in proportion as he is more the Friend of Cæsar.

§. q. Since then, neither they who are called Kings (m), nor the Friends of Kings, live as they like; who, after all, are free? Seek, and you will find: for you are furnished by Nature with Means for discovering the Truth. But, if you are not able by these alone to find the Consequence, hear them who have fought it. What do they fay? Do you think Freedom a Good ?---" The greatest."---Can any one then, who attains the greatest Good be unhappy, or unsuccessful in his Affairs? --- "No." ---- As many, therefore, as you fee. unhappy, lamenting, unprosperous, confidently pronounce them not free .--- "I do."--- Henceforth then we have done with Buying and Selling, and fuch-like stated Conditions of becoming Slaves. For, if you have made thefe Concessions properly, whether a great or a little King, a Confular, or one twice a Conful, be unhappy, he is not free .--- " Agreed,"

⁽¹⁾ Aradyntos for aradions. UPTON.

⁽m) The Stoics held the wife Man to be the only real King. UPTON,

§. 10. Further then, answer me this: Do you think Freedom to be fomething great, and noble, and valuable?----" How should I not?" ---- Is it possible then, that he who acquires any thing fo great, and valuable, and noble, should be of an abject Spirit ?---" It is not."----Whenever then you fee any one subject to another, and flattering him, contrary to his own Opinion, confidently fay, that He too is not free: and not only if he doth it for a Supper, but even if it be for a Government; nay, a Confulship: but call those indeed little Slaves, who act thus for the Sake of little Things; and the others, as they deferve, great Slaves .---" Be this too agreed." ---- Well: do you think Freedom to be fomething independent and felf-determined?---" How " can it be otherwise?" ---- Him then, whom it is in the Power of another to reftrain or to compell, affirm confidently, to be not free. And do not mind his Grandfathers, or Great Grandfathers; or inquire, whether he hath been bought or fold: but, if you hear him fay, from his Heart, and with Emotion, my Master, though twelve Lictors should march before him, call him a Slave. And, if you should hear him fay, Wretch, that I am! what do I fuffer! call him a Slave. In fhort, if you fee him wailing, complaining, unprosperous, call him a Slave in Purple .--- " Suppose then he doth nothing " of all this?" ---- Do not yet fay, he is free; but learn whether his Principles are liable to Compulsion, to Restraint, or Difappointment; and, if you find this to be the Case, call him a Slave, keeping Holiday during the Saturnalia (n). Say, that his Master is abroad: he will come presently; and you will know what he fuffers. "Who will come?" -- Whoever hath the Power either of bestowing, or taking away. any of the Things, he wishes for. -- " Have we so many " Mafters then?" -- We have. For, prior to all fuch, we have the Things themselves for our Masters; now they are many: and it is through these, that it becomes necessary that fuch as have the Disposal of them, should be our Masters too. For no one fears Cæsar himself; but Death, Banishment, Lofs of Goods, Prison, Disgrace. Nor doth any one love Cæfar, unless he be a Person of great Worth: but we love Riches, the Tribunate, the Prætorship, the Consulship. When we love, and hate, and fear these Things, they who have the Disposal of them must necessarily be our Masters. Hence we even worship them as Gods. For we consider, that whoever hath the Disposal of the greatest Advantages, is a Deity: and then we subjoin falsely, but such a one hath the Power of the greatest Advantages; therefore he is a Deity. For, if we subjoin falfely, the Inference arising from thence must be false likewise.

⁽n) The Feaft of Saturn, in which the Slaves had a Liberty of fitting at Table with their Mafters; in Memory of the Equality of Conditions under his Reign.

§. 11. "What is it then that makes a Man free and inde"pendent? For neither Riches, nor Confulfhip, nor Com"mand of Provinces, or Kingdoms, make him fo; but "fomething elfe muft be found."——What is it that preferves any one from being hindered and reftrained in Writing?——
"The Science of Writing."——In Mufic?——"The Science of Mufic."——Therefore, in Life too, the Science of Living.
As you have heard it in general then, confider it likewife in Particulars. Is it possible for Him to be unrestrained, who defires any of those Things, that are in the Power of others? --- "No."--- Can he avoid being hindered?--- "No."----Therefore neither can he be free. Confider then, whether we have nothing, or all, in our own Power alone; or whether fome Things are in our own Power, and fome in that of others .--- " What do you mean?" ---- When you would have your Body perfect, is it in your own Power, or is it not? --- "It is not." ---- When you would be healthy? --- "Nor "this."----When you would be handsome?---"Nor this." ---Live, or die?--- Nor this."---Body then is not our own; but subject to every thing stronger than itself .----"Agreed."----Well: is it in your own Power to have an Estate when you please, and as long as you please, and such a one as you please? "No." Slaves? "No." Clothes? --- "No." --- A House? --- "No." --- Horses? " Indeed none of these." ---- Well: if you would ever so fain have your Children live, or your Wife, or your Brother, or your Friends, is it in your own Power?---" No, nor " this."-Will you fay then, that there is nothing independent, which is in your own Power alone, and unalienable? See then, if you have any thing of this Sort .--- "I do not "know."-But, confider it thus: Can any one make you affent to a Falshood?-" No one."-In the Topic of Affent then, you are unreftrained, and unhindered .----" Agreed."----Well: and can any one compell you to exert your Pursuits, towards what you do not like ?--- " He can. " For when he threatens me with Death, or Fetters, he con-" pells me to exert them."--- If then you were to despife dying, or being fettered, would you any longer regard him?----" No."----Is despising Death then an Action in our Power, or is it not?--- " It is."--- Is it therefore in your Power also, to exert your Pursuits towards any thing, or is it not ?----" Agreed, that it is. But in whose Power is my avoiding " any thing?"---This too is in your own.---" What then, " if, when I am exerting myfelf to walk, any one should " restrain me?"----What Part of you can he restrain? Can he reftrain your Affent?---" No: but my Body."----Ay, as he may a Stone .--- "Be it fo. But still I walk no more." ----And who told you, that Walking was an Action of your own, that cannot be reftrained? For I only faid, that your exerting yourfelf towards it could not be reftrained. But, where there is need of Body, and its Assistance, you have already heard, that nothing is in your Power .--- "Be this too " agreed."----And can any one compell you to defire against your Will?---" No one."---Or to propose, or intend, or, in short, not to make use of the Appearances which present themselves to you?----" Nor this. But when I desire any "thing, he will reftrain me from obtaining what I defire."---If you defire any thing that is your own, and that cannot be reftrained, how can He reftrain you?---- By no means."----And pray who tells you, that he who defires what depends on another, cannot be reftrained?--- "May not I defire Health "then?"---By no means: nor any thing elfe that depends on another: for what is not in your own Power, either to procure, or to preferve, when you will, that belongs to another. Keep off not only your Hands from it, but, far prior to . these, your Desires. Otherwise you have given yourself up a Slave: you have put your Neck under the Yoke, if you admire any of the Things not your own, but subject and mortal, to which foever of them you are attached .--- " Is cc not

" not my Hand my own?"-It is a Part of you; but it is, by Nature, Clay; liable to Restraint, to Compulsion; a Slave to every thing stronger than itself. And why do I say your Hand? You ought to possess your whole Body as a paultry Ass, with a Pack-saddle on, as long as may be, as long as it is allowed you. But, if there should come a Press (o), and a Soldier should lay hold on it, let it go. Do not refist, or murmur: otherwife you will be first beat, and lose the Ass after all. And, fince you are to confider the Body [itself] in this manner, think what remains to do, concerning those Things which are provided for the Sake of the Body. If that be an Afs, the rest are Bridles, Pack-faddles, Shoes, Oats, Hay, for the Afs. Let these go too. Quit them more easily and expeditiously, than the Ass. And when you are thus prepared, and thus exercifed, to diffinguish what belongs to others from your own; what is liable to Restraint, from what is not; toefteem the one your own Property, the other not; to keep your Defire, to keep your Aversion, carefully turned to this Point; whom have you any longer to fear?---" No one."----For about what should you be afraid? About what is your own, in which confifts the Effence of Good and Evil? And who hath any Power over this? Who can take it away? Who can hinder you? No more than God [can be hindered]. But are you afraid for Body, for Possessions, for what belongs to others, for what is nothing to you? And what have you been studying all this while, but to distinguish between your own, and not your own; what is in your Power, and what is not in your Power; what is liable to Restraint, and what is not? And for what Purpose have you applied to the Phisosophers? That you might be never the less disappointed and unfortunate? No doubt you will be exempt from Fear and Perturbation! And what is Grief to you? For [nothing but] what we fear, when expected, affects us with Grief, when present. And what will you any longer passionately wish for? For you have a temperate and steady Desire of Things dependent on Choice, as they are good, and present: and you have no Desire of Things independent on Choice, so as to leave room for that irrational and impetuous, and immoderately hafty Passion.

⁽a) Beafts of Burthen and Carriages are preffed, for the Use of Armies, when Need requires.

The Discourses of Book IV.

3527

§ 12. Since then you are thus affected with regard to Things, what Man can any longer be formidable to you? What hath Man formidable to Man, either in Appearance, or Speech, or mutual Intercourse? No more than Horse to Horse, or Dog to Dog, or Bee to Bee. But Things are formidable to every one, and when-ever any Person can either confer or take away these from another, He becomes formidable too.——"How (p) then is the Citadel" [the Seat of Tyranny] "to be destroyed?"—Not by Sword or Fire, but by Principle. For if we should demolish that which is in the Town, shall we have demolished also that of a Fever, of pretty Girls, in short, the Citadel within ourselves; and

⁽p) Pepiticum here personates one desirous of recovering the Liberty of the City, in which he lives. There were Citadels, erected from Time to Time, in Greek Cities, to support Tyrants: and they and the Citadels were destroyed together, whenever it could be done; turned out the Tyrants, to whom we are fubject upon all Occasions, every Day; fometimes the same, sometimes others? From hence we must begin; from hence demolish the Citadel; turn out the Tyrants: give up Body, its Parts, Riches, Power, Fame, Magistracies, Honours, Children, Brothers, Friends: efteem all these as belonging to others. And, if the Tyrants be turned out from hence, why should I befides demolifh the [external] Citadel; at leaft, on my own Account? For what doth it do to me by flanding? Why should I turn out the Guards? For in what Point do they affect me? It is against others they direct their Fasces, their Staves, and their Swords. Have I ever been restrained from what I willed? Or compelled against my Will? Indeed how is this possible? I have ranged my Pursuits under the Direction of God. Is it His Will, that I should have a Fever? It is my Will too. Is it His Will, that I should purfue any Thing? It is my Will too. Is it His Will, that I should defire? It is my Will too. Is it His Will, that I should obtain any Thing? It is mine too. Is it not His Will? It is not mine. Is it His Will, that I should be tortured(q)? Then it is my Will to be tortured. Is it His Will, that I should die? Then it is my Will to die. Who can any longer reftrain or compell me, contrary to my own Opinion? No more than Jupiter [can be restrained]. It is thus that cautious Travellers act. Doth any one hear, that the Road is befet by Robbers? He doth not fet out alone; but waits for the Retinue of an Embassador, or Questor, or a Pro-

⁽q) The Translation here is agreeable to Mr. Upton's Copy.

conful: and, when he hath joined himself to their Company, goes along in Safety. Thus doth the prudent Man act in the World. There are many Robberies, Tyrants, Storms, Diffresses, Losses of Things the most dear. Where is there any Refuge? How can he go along unattacked? What Retinue can he wait for, to go fafely through his Journey? To what Company join himself? To some rich Man? To fome Confular Senator? And what Good will that do me? He is [often] ftript himfelf; groans, and laments. And what if my Fellow Traveller himself should turn against me, and rob me? What shall I do? I will be the Friend of Cæsar. While I am his Companion, no one will injure me. Yet, before I can become illustrious enough for this, what must I bear and fuffer! How often, and by how many, must I be robbed! And then, if I do become the Friend of Cafar, he too is mortal: and if, by any Accident, he should become my Enemy, where can I best retreat? To a Desart? Well: and doth not a Fever come there? What can be done then? Is it not possible to find a Fellow Traveller, safe, faithful, brave, incapable of being furprifed? A Person, who reasons thus, understands and considers, that, if he joins himself to God, he shall go safely through his Journey .--- " How do you " mean, join himself?" --- That whatever is the Will of God, may be bis Will too: whatever is not the Will of God, may not be bis .--- " How then can this be done?"----Why, how otherwise than by considering the Exertions of God's Power, and his Administration? What hath he given me, my own, and independent? What hath he referred to himself? He hath given me whatever depends upon Choice. The Things in my Power he hath made incapable of Hindrance drance or Restraint. But how could he make a Body of Clay (r) incapable of Hindrance? Therefore he hath fubjected [that, and] Poffessions, Furniture, House, Children, Wife, to the Revolution of the Universe. Why then do I fight against God? Why do I will to retain what depends not on Will? What is not granted absolutely; but how? In fuch a Manner, and for fuch a Time, as was thought proper. But he who gave, takes away(s). Why then do I refift? Not to fay, that I shall be a Fool in contending with a ftronger than myself; what is a prior Consideration, I shall be unjust. For whence had I these Things, when I came into the World? My Father gave them to me. And who gave them to bim? And who made the Sun? Who, the Fruits? Who, the Seafons? Who, their Connexion and Relation to each other? And, after you have received all, and even your very Self from another, are you angry with the Giver; and complain, if He takes any thing away from you? Who are you; and for what Purpose did you come? Was it not He who brought you here? Was it not He who showed you the Light? Hath not He given you Affiftants? Hath not He given you Senses? Hath not He given you Reason? And as whom did He bring you here? Was it not as a Mortal? Was it not as one to live, with a little Portion of Flesh, upon Earth, and to fee his Administration; to behold the Spectacle with him, and partake of the Festival for a short Time? After having beheld the Spectacle, and the Solemnity, then, as long as it is permitted you, will you not depart, when He leads you out, adoring and thankful for what you have heard and feen?--- " No: but I would enjoy the Feaft still " longer."---So would the Initiated too be longer in their Initiation; fo, perhaps, would the Spectators at Olympia fee more Combatants. But the Solemnity is over. Go away. Depart, like a grateful and modest Person: make room for others. Others too must be born, as you were; and, when they are born, must have a Place, and Habitations, and Necessaries. But, if the first do not give way, what [Room] is there left? Why are you infatiable? Why are you unconfcionable? Why do you crowd the World?--- "Ay: but "I would have my Wife and Children with me too,"----Why, are they your's? Are they not the Giver's? Are they not His who made you also? Will you not quit what belongs to another then? Will you not yield to your Superior?----" Why then did he bring me into the World upon these. "Conditions?"---Well: if it is not worth your while, depart(t). He hath no Need of a discontented Spectator. He wants fuch as may share the Festival; make Part of the Chorus: who may rather extoll, applaud, celebrate the. Solemnity: He will not be displeased to see the Wretched and Fearful difmiffed from it. For, when they were prefent,

⁽r) Sec B. I. c. 1. §. 3.

⁽s) The Lord gave, and the Lord bath taken away. Job, i. 21.

⁽²⁾ And is this all the Comfort, every ferious Resider will be apt to fay, which one of the bert Philosophers, in one of his nobleft Discourses, can give to the good Man under severe Diffres ? "Either tell yourself, "that present; Suffering, void of future Hope, is no Evil; or give any your Existence, and mingle with the Elements of the Univerself." Unspeakably more rational, and more worthy of infinite Goodness, is our bleflest Matter's Exhortation to the persecuted Christian: "Rejoice, and "be exceeding glad, for great is your Reward in Heaven."

they did not behave as at a Feftival, nor fill a proper Place; but lamented, found fault with the Deity, Fortune, their Companions: infentible both of their Advantages, and their Powers, which they received for contrary Purpofes; the Powers of Magnanimity, Nobleness of Spirit, Fortitude, and, the Subject of present Enquiry, Freedom.—"For what Purpofer pose then have I received these Things?"—To use them.—"How long?"—As long as He, who lent them, pleases. If then they are not necessary, do not attach yourself to them, and they will not be so: do not tell yourself, that they are necessary, and they are not.

§. 13. This should be our Study from Morning till Night, beginning from the least and frailest Things, from an earthen Veffel, from a Glass. Afterwards, proceed to a Suit of Clothes, a Dog, a Horfe, an Eftate: from thence to your Self, Body, Parts of the Body, Children, Wife, Brothers. Look everywhere around you, and throw them from yourfelf. Correct. your Principles. See that nothing cleave to you, which is not your own; nothing grow (u) to you, that may give you Pain, when it is torn away. And fay, when you are daily exercifing yourfelf as you do here, not that you act the Philosopher (admit this to be an infolent Title), but that you are afferting your Freedom. For this is true Freedom. This is the Freedom, that Diogenes gained from Antisthenes; and declared, it was impossible, that he should ever after be a Slave, to any one. Hence, when he was taken Prisoner, how did he treat the Pirates? Did he call any of them Mafter?

⁽u) Mr. Upton's Conjecture.

(I do not mean the Name, for I am not afraid of a Word, but the Disposition from whence the Word proceeds.) How did he reprove them for feeding their Prisoners ill? How was he fold? Did he feek a Mafter? (w) No: but a Slave. And when he was fold, how did he converse with his Lord? He immediately disputed with him, that he ought not to be dressed nor shaved in the manner he was; how he ought to bring up his Children. And where is the Wonder? For if the fame Mafter had bought an Instructor for his Children, in the Exercises of the Palæstra, would he in those Exercises have treated him as a Servant, or as a Master? And so if he had bought a Physician or an Architect? In every Subject, the Skilful must necessarily be superior to the Unskilful. What else then can he be but Master, who posfesses the universal Knowlege of Life? For who is Master in a Ship? The Pilot. Why? Because whoever disobeys him is a Lofer .-- "But a Mafter can put me in Chains."--- Can he do it then without being a Loser?---" So I, among others, " used to think." ---- But, because he must be a Loser, for that very Reason it is not in his Power: for no one acts unjustly, without being a Loser .-- "And what Loss doth He ". fuffer, who puts his own Slave in Chains?" -- What think you? The very putting him in Chains. This you yourfelf must grant, if you would preferve the Doctrine, that Man is not a wild, but a gentle Animal. For when is it, that a Vine is in a bad Condition?---" When it is in a Condition con-"trary to its Nature."---When a Cock ?---" The fame."---Therefore a Man too. What then is his Nature? To bite, and kick, and throw into Prison, and cut off Heads? No: but to do good, to affift, to indulge the Wifhes of others. Whether you will, or not then, he is in a bad Condition, when-ever he acts unreasonably .-- "And so, was not Socrates " in a bad Condition?" --- No: but his Judges and Accusers. --- "Nor Helvidius, at Rome?" --- No: but his Murderer.---"How do you talk?"---(x) Why, just as You do. You do not call that Cock in a bad Condition, which is victorious, and wounded; but that which is conquered, and comes off unhurt. Nor do you call a Dog happy, which neither hunts nor toils; but when you fee him fweating, and in pain, and panting, with the Chace. In what do we talk Paradoxes? If we fay, that the Evil of every thing confifts in what is contrary to its Nature, is this a Paradox? Do not you fay it with regard to all other Things? Why therefore, in the Case of Man alone, do you take a different Turn? But farther: it is no Paradox to fay, that by Nature Man is gentle, and focial, and faithful.—" This is (y) none neither."— How then [is it a Paradox to fay,] that, when he is whipped, or imprisoned, or beheaded, he is not hurt? If he fuffers nobly, doth not he come off even the better, and a Gainer? But he is the Person hurt, who suffers the most miserable and shameful Evils: who, instead of a Man, becomes a Wolf. or Viper, or a Hornet.

⁽w) See p. 157. Note (c).

⁽x) The Translation here follows a different Pointing from Mr. Upton, Πως λεγκις; ως και συ. Αλεκτρυονα, &c.

⁽y) This Answer implies a filent Concession, that it is no Paradox to affirm, the Evil of every thing to consist, in what is contrary to its Nature.

360 The Discourses of Book IV.

§. 14. Come then: let us recapitulate what hath been The Man who is unreftrained, who hath all oranted. Things in his Power as he wills, is free: but he who may be refrained, or compelled, or hindered, or thrown into any Condition against his Will, is a Slave, --- "And who is unre-" ftrained?"---- He that defires none of those Things, that belong to others .--- " And what are those Things, which " belong to others?"---Those which are not in our own Power, either to have, or not to have; or to have them of fuch a Sort, or in fuch a State. Body, therefore, belongs to another; its Parts, to another; Possessions, to another. If then you attach yourfelf to any of these as your own, you will be punished, as he deserves, who desires what belongs to others. This is the Way, that leads to Freedom; this the only Deliverance from Slavery; to be able at length to fay, from the Bottom of one's Soul, Conduct me, Jove, and Thou, O Destiny, Where-ever Your Decrees have fix'd my Lot.

§. 15. But what fay you, Philosopher? A Tyrant fummons you to speak something unbecoming you. Will you fay it, or will you not?——" Stay, let me consider."——Would you consider now? And what did you use to consider, when you were in the Schools? Did not you study what 'Things are good, and evil, and what indifferent?——" I did."——Well: and what were the Opinions which pleased us?——" That suft and (2) fair Actions were good: unjust and

⁽²⁾ The Translation here follows Mr. Upton's Conjecture.

" base ones, evil." -- Is living a Good? --- " No." --- Dying, an Evil ? --- " No." --- A Prifon ? --- " No." --- And what did a mean and dishonest Speech, the betraving a Friend, or the flattering a Tyrant, appear to us? --- " Evils."----Why then are you ftill confidering, and have not already confidered, and come to a Refolution? For what Sort of a Confideration is this? Whether I ought, when it is in my Power, to procure myself the greatest Good, instead of procuring myself the greatest Evil. A fine and necessary Consideration, truly, and deferving mighty Deliberation! Why do you trifle with us, Man? There never was any fuch Point confidered: nor, if you really imagined what was fair and honest to be good, what base and dishonest, evil, and all other Things indifferent, would you ever be at fuch a Stand as this, or near it: but you would prefently be able to diftinguish, by your Understanding, as you do by your Sight. For do you ever confider, whether black is white; or light, heavy? Do not you follow the plain Evidence of your Senfes? Why then do you fay, that you are now confidering, whether Things indifferent are to be avoided, rather than Evils? The Truth is, you have no Principles: for neither doth the one Sort of Things appear to you indifferent, but the greatest Evils; nor the other Evils, but Matters of no Concern to you. For thus you have accustomed yourself from the first. " Where am I? In the School? And is " there an Audience? I talk as the Philosophers do. But " am I got out from the School? Away with this Stuff, " that belongs only to Scholars and Fools. This Man is " accused by the Testimony of a Philosopher, his Friend: 45 this Philosopher turns Parasite; that hires himself out for " Money;

" Money; a third doth it in the very Senate. Who doth " not wish what appears [to himself to be right]? His " (a) Principles exclaim from within." You are a poor cold Lump of Opinion, confifting of mere Words; on which you hang, as by a Hair. But preferve yourfelf firm, firm, and make a due Use of the Appearances; remembering, that you are to be exercised in Things. In what manner do you hear, I do not fay, that your Child is dead, (for how should you bear that?) but that your Oil is spilled, your Wine drank out? That any one, while you are bawling, might only fay this; "Philosopher, you talk otherwise " in the Schools. Why do you deceive us? Why, when " you are a Worm, do you call yourfelf a Man?" I should be glad to be near 'one of these Philosophers, while he is revelling in Debauchery, that I might fee how he exerts himself, and what Sayings he utters; whether he remembers his Title, and the Difcourfes which he hears, or fpeaks, or reads.

§. 16. "And what is all this to Freedom?"—Truly nothing elfe is, but this, whether you rich People will or not.
—"And who is your Evidence of this?"—Who, but yourfelves? Who have a powerful Mafter, and live by his Motion and Nod, and faint away, if he doth but look fternly upon you: who pay your Court to old Men, and old Women, and fay, "I cannot do this, it is not in my Power." Why is it not in your Power? Did not you just now contradict me, and fay, you were free? "But Aprylla (b) " hath forbid me." -- Speak the Truth then, Slave, and do not run away from your Masters; nor deny them, nor dare to affert your Freedom, when you have so many Proofs of your Slavery. One might indeed find fome Excuse for a Person, compelled by Love to do something contrary to his Opinion, even when at the fame time he fees what is best, and yet hath not Resolution enough to follow it; since he is with-held by fomething violent, and, in fome meafure, divine. But who can bear you, who are in Love with old Men and old Women; and wipe their Nofes, and wash them, and bribe them with Presents, and wait upon them when they are fick, like a Slave; at the same time wishing they may die, and enquiring of the Physician, whether their Diftemper be yet mortal? And again, when for these great and venerable Magistracies and Honours, you kiss the Hands of the Slaves of others; fo that you are the Slave of those who are not free themselves! And then you walk about in State, a Prætor, or a Conful. Do not I know how you came to be Prætor; whence you received the Confulship; who gave it you? For my own Part, I would not even live. if I must live by Felicio's Means, and bear his Pride, and flavish Insolence. For I know what a Slave is, blinded by what he thinks good Fortune.

⁽a) There is much Obfeurity, and fome Variety of Reading, in feveral Lines of the Original, in this Place; and I am not certain, whether the Translation hath given the true Senfe; but it is the beft I could make of it.

§. 17. Are you free yourfelf then? (It will be faid.) By Heaven I wish and pray for it. But I cannot yet face my ⁽b) Probably fome rich old Woman, from whom the Speaker had Expectations.

Masters. I still pay a Regard to my Body, and set a great Value on keeping it whole; though at the fame time it is. not whole (c). But I can show you one who was free, that you may no longer feek an Example. Diogenes was free.-"How fo?"-Not because he was of free Parents, for he was not: but because he was so himself; because he had cast away all the Handles of Slavery; nor was there any Way of getting at him, nor any-where to lay hold on him, to enflave him. Every thing fat loofe upon him, every thing only just hung on. If you took hold on his Possessions, he would rather let them go, than follow you for them: if on his Leg, he let go his Leg: if his Body, he let go his Body: Acquaintance, Friends, Country, just the same. For he knew whence he had them, and from whom, and upon what Conditions he received them. But he would never have forfaken his true Parents the Gods, and his real Country; nor have fuffered any one to be more dutiful and obedient to them than he: nor would any one have died more readily for his Country than he. For he never fought when it would be proper for him to act for the Sake of (d) any thing else, [except his real Country the Universe;] but he remembered, that every thing that exists is from thence, and carried on by it, and commanded by its Ruler. According, fee what he himself says and writes. " Upon this Account, says he, O " Diogenes, it is in your Power to converse as you will with " the Persian Monarch, and with Archidamas, King of the ⁽c) Epičletus here alludes to his own Lameners. See p. 32 and 57.

⁽d) This Passage hath great Difficulties in the Original. I have given it what appeared to me the best Sense. But I am still doubtful.

[&]quot; Lacedemonians."

"Lacedemonians."—Was it because be was born of free Parents? Or was it because they were descended from Slaves, that all the Athenians, and all the Lacedemonians, and Corinthians, could not converse with them as they pleased; but seared and paid Court to them? Why then is it in your Power, Diagenes? "Because I do not esteem this sorry "Body as my own. Because I want nothing. Because these "[Principles,] and nothing else, are a Law to me." These were the Things that suffered him to be free.

§. 18. And that you may not think, that I show you the Example of a Man clear of Incumbrances; without a Wife or Children, or Country or Friends, or Relations, to bend and draw him asside: take Socrates, and consider him, who had a Wife and Children, but not as his own; a Country, Friends, Relations; but only as long as it was proper, and in the manner that was proper; and all these he submitted to the Law, and to the Obedience due to it. Hence, when it was proper to fight, he was the first to go out, and exposed himself to Danger, without the least Reserve. But when he was sent by the Thirty Tyrants to apprehend Leo(e); because he esteemed it a base Action, he did not deliberate about it; though he knew, that, perhaps, he might die for ⁽e) Socrates, with Four other Perfons, was commanded by the Thirty Tyrants of Athens to fetch Leo from the Ille of Salamis, in order to be put to Death. His Companions executed their Committion; but Socrates remained at home, and chose rather to expose his Lise to the Fury of the Tyrants, than be accessfary to the Death of an innocent Person. He would most probably have fallen a Sacrifice to their Vengeance, if the Oligarchy had not shortly after been dissolved. See PLANO's Apology.

it. But what did that fignify to bim? For it was fomething else that he wanted to preserve, not his paultry Flesh: but his Fidelity, his Honour, free from Attack, or Subjec-And afterwards, when he was to make a Defence for his Life, doth he behave like one who had Children? Or a Wife? No: (f) but like a fingle Man. And how doth he behave, when he was to drink the Poison? When he might have escaped, and Crito persuaded him to get out of Prison, for the Sake of his Children, what doth he fay? Doth he efteem it a fortunate Opportunity? How should he? But he confiders what is becoming, and neither fees nor regards any thing else. " For I am not desirous, says he, to preserve "this pitiful Body; but that [Part of me] which is improved "and preserved by Justice, and impaired and destroyed by "Iniuftice." Socrates is not to be basely preserved. He, who refused to vote for what the Athenians commanded: he, who contemned the Thirty Tyrants: he, who held fuch Discourses on Virtue, and moral Beauty: such a Man is not to be preferved by a base Action; but is preserved by dying, not by running away. For even a good Actor is preferved by leaving off when he ought; not by going on to act beyond "What then will become of your Children?" " If I had gone away into Theffaly, you would have taken " care of them; and will there be no one to take care of "them, when I am departed to Hades?" You fee how he ridicules, and plays with Death. But, if it had been you or I, we should presently have proved, by philosophical Arguments, that those, who act unjustly, are to be repaid in their own Way; and should have added, " If I escape, I shall be " of Use to many; if I die, to none." Nay, if it had been necessary, we should have crept through a Mouse-hole to get away. But how should we have been of Use to any? For where must they have dwelt? If we were useful alive, should we not be of still more Use to Mankind, by dying when we ought, and as we ought? And now the Remembrance of the Death of Socrates is not less, but even more useful to the World, than that of the Things which he did and faid when alive.

§. 19. Study these Points, these Principles, these Discourses: contemplate these Examples, if you would be free, if you defire the Thing in proportion to its Value. And where is the Wonder, that you should purchase so great a Thing at the Price of others, fo many, and fo great? Some hang themselves, others break their Necks, and sometimes even whole Cities have been deftroyed, for that which is reputed Freedom: and will not you, for the Sake of the true, and fecure, and inviolable Freedom, repay God what he hath given, when he demands it? Will you not fludy, not only as Plato fays, to die, but to be tortured, and banished, and fcourged; and, in short, to give up all that belongs to others. If not, you will be a Slave among Slaves, though you were ten thousand Times a Conful: and, even though you should rife to the Palace, you will be never the less for And you will feel, that though Philosophers (as Cleanthes fays) do, perhaps, talk contrary to common Opinion, yet not contrary to Reafon. For you will find it true in fact, that the Things that are eagerly followed and admired, are of no Ufe to thafe those, who have gained them: while they who have not yet gained them, imagine, that, if they are acquired, every Good will come along with them: and then, when they are acquired, there is the same Feverishness, the same Agitation, the same Nauseating, and the same Desire of what is absent. For Freedom is not procured by a full Enjoyment of what is desired, but by proving the Desire to be a wrong one. And, in order to know that this is true, take the same Pains about these, which you have taken about other Things: Lie awake to acquire a Set of Principles, that will make you free. Instead of a rich old Man, pay your Court to a Philosopher. Be seen about his Doors. You will not get any Disgrace by being seen there. You will not return empty, or unprosited, if you go as you ought. However, try at least. The Tryal is not dishonourable,

CHAPTER II.

Of Complaifance (a).

§. I. TO this Point you must attend before all others: Not to be so attached to any one of your former Acquaintance or Friends, as to condescend to the same Behaviour with his; otherwise you will undo yourself. But, if it comes into your Head, I shall appear odd to him, and he will not treat me as before, remember, that there is nothing to be had for nothing: nor is it possible, that he who acts in the fame manner, should not be the fame Person. Chuse then, whether you will be loved by those you were formerly, and be like your former felf; or be better, and not meet with the same Treatment. For, if this is preferable, immediately incline altogether that Way, and let no other Kinds of Reasoning draw you aside: for no one can improve while he is wavering (b). If then you prefer this to every thing, if you would be fixed only on this, and employ all your Pains about it, give up every thing elfe. Otherwise this Wavering will affect you both Ways: you will neither make a due Improvement, nor preserve the Advantages you had before. For before, by fetting your Heart intirely on Things of no Value, you were agreeable to your Companions. you cannot excell in both Kinds: but must necessarily lose as much of the one, as you partake of the other. If you do not drink with those, with whom you used to drink, you cannot appear equally agreeable to them. Chuse then, whether you would be a Drunkard, and agreeable to them, or fober, and difagreeable to them. If you do not fing with those, with whom you used to sing, you cannot be equally dear to them. Here too then, chuse which you will. For if it is better to be modest and decent, than to have it said of you, what an agreeable Fellow I give up the reft; renounce it; withdraw yourself; have nothing to do with it. But, if this doth not please you, incline, with your whole Force, the contrary Way. Be one of the Catamites; one of the Adulterers. Act all that is confequent to fuch a Character, and you will obtain what you would have. Jump up in the Theatre too, and roar out in praife of the Dancer. But Characters so different are not to be confounded. You cannot act both Therfites and Agamemnon. If you would be Therfites, you must be hump-backed and bald: if Agamemnon, tall and handsome, and a Lover of those who are under your Care.

⁽a) Compare this Chapter with Matth. vi. 24. No Man can ferve 1300 Mafters.

⁽b) See Jam. i. 8.

The DISCOURSES of Book IV.

370

CHAPTER III.

What Things are to be exchanged for others.

§. 1. WHEN you have loft any thing external, have this always at hand, what you have got instead of it: and, if that be of more Value, do not by any means fay, " I am a Lofer:" whether it be a Horse for an Ass; an Ox for a Sheep; a good Action for a Piece of Money; a due Composedness of Mind for a dull Jest; or Modesty for indecent Difcourfe. By continually remembering this, you will preferve your Character fuch as it ought to be. Otherwife confider, that you are fpending your Time in vain; and all that you are now applying your Mind to, you are going to fpill and overfet. And there needs but little, and a fmall Deviation from Reason, to destroy and overset all. Pilot doth not need the fame Apparatus to overfet a Ship, as to fave it; but, if he turns it a little to the Wind, it is loft: even if he should not do it by Design, but only for a Moment be thinking of fomething elfe, it is loft. Such is the Case here too. If you do but nod a little, all that you have hitherto collected is gone. Take Heed then to the Appearances of Things. Keep yourfelf awake over them.

It is no inconfiderable Matter you have to guard; but Modesty, Fidelity, Constancy, Enjoyment (a), Exemption from Grief, Fear, Perturbation; in short, Freedom. For what will you fell these? Consider, what the Purchase is worth,--" But shall I not get such a Thing instead of it?" ----Confider, if you do get it (b), what it is that you obtain for the other. I have Decency; another the Office of a Tribune: I have Modesty; he hath the Prætorship. But I do not make Acclamations where it is unbecoming: I shall not rife (c) up [to do Honour to another] in a Cafe where I ought not: for I am free, and the Friend of God, fo as to obey him willingly: but I must not value any thing else; neither Body, nor Possessions, nor Fame; in short, nothing. For it is not His Will, that I should value them. For, if this had been his Pleafure, he would have made them my Good, which now he hath not done: therefore I cannot transgress his Commands.--" In every thing preferve your own proper "Good."---" But what of the reft?"---" Preferve them too " according as it is permitted, and fo far as to behave agree-" ably to Reason in relation to them; contented with this " alone. Otherwise you will be unfortunate, disappointed, " reftrained, hindered." These are the Laws, these the Statutes, transmitted from thence. Of these one ought to be an Expositor, and to these obedient, not to those of Majurius (d) and Cassius.

⁽a) See p. 314. Note (e).

⁽b) I suspect, that τυρχατου flould be ου τυρχατου, and then the Translation will be, — Consider, on the other hand, if you do not get that, what you obtain instead of it.

⁽c) Probably Epičtetus here alludes to the jumping up in the Theatre, in favour of form Actor, mentioned in the preceding Chapter, and in the Fourth Chapter of the Third Book.

CHAPTER IV.

Concerning Those who earnestly desire a Life of Repose.

§. I. To EMEMBER, that it is not only the Defire of Riches and Power that renders us mean, and fubject to others, but even of Quiet, and Leifure, and Learning, and Travelling. For, in general, valuing any external Thing whatever, subjects us to another. Where is the Difference then, whether you defire to be a Senator, or not to be a Senator? Where is the Difference whether you defire Power, or to be out of Power? Where is the Difference, whether you fay, " I " am in a wretched Way, I have nothing to do; but am tied " down to Books, as inactive as if I were dead;"-or, "I " am in a wretched Way, I have no Leifure to read?" For as Levees and Power are among Things external, and independent on Choice, fo likewise is a Book. For what Purpose would you read? Tell me. For if you rest merely in being amused, and learning something, you are infignificant and miferable. But if you refer it to what you ought, what is that but a prosperous Life? And if Reading doth not procure you a prosperous Life, of what Use is it? " But it doth " procure a prosperous Life (fay you); and therefore I am " uneafy at being deprived of it." --- And what Sort of ⁽d) Two famous Lawyers. This Paffage is an Inflance of the Manner of Speaking, Icfs ufual among the Greek and Roman, than the Eaftern Writers; where enjoining one Thing, and forbidding another, means only that the first should be preferred in Case of Competition.

Prosperity is that, which every thing, I do not say Cæsar, or the Friend of Cæsar, but a Crow, a Piper, a Fever, ten thousand other Things, can hinder? But nothing is so essential to Prosperity, as the being perpetual, and unhindered. I am now called to do fomething. I now go therefore, and will be attentive to the Bounds and Measures, which ought to be observed; that I may act modestly, steadily, and without Defire or Aversion with regard to Externals (a). In the next place, I am attentive to other Men; what they say, and how they are moved: and that, not from Ill-nature, nor that I may have an Opportunity for Cenfure or Ridicule: but I turn to myself, [and ask,] " Am I also guilty of the same " Faults; and how then shall I leave them off?" (b) Once I too was faulty; but, God be thanked, not now. Well: when you have done thus, and been employed in this manner, have not you done as good a Work, as if you had read a thousand Lines, or written as many? For are you uneasy

⁽a) The Readers, perhaps, may grow tired, with being fo often told, what they will find it very difficult to believe, 'That, because Externals are not in our own Power, they are nothing to us. But, in Excuse for this frequent Repetition, it must be considered, that the Stoies had reduced themselves to a Necessity of dwelling on this Consequence, extravagant as it is, by rejecting stronger Aids. One cannot indeed avoid highly admiring the very Few, who attempted to amend and exalt themselves, on this Foundation. No one, perhaps, ever carried the Attempt fo far in Practice; and no one ever spoke so well in Support of the Argument, as Episteus. Yet, notwithstanding his great Abilities, and the Force of his Example, one finds him frongly complaining of the Want of Success: and one sees from this Circumstance, as well as from many others in the Stoie Writings, That Virtue cannot be maintained in the World, without the Hope of a future Reward.

⁽b) Tote, perhaps thould be more; and is fo translated.

at not reading while your are eating, or bathing, or exercifing? Are not you fatisfied with performing these Actions conformably to what you have read? Why then do you not think uniformly about every thing? When you approach Cæfar, or any other Person, if you preserve yourself unpasfionate, unalarmed, fedate; if you are rather an Observer of what is done, than [yourfelf] observed; if you do not envy those who are preferred to you; if the Materials of Action do not ftrike vou; what do you want? Books? How, or to what End? For is not this a Kind of Preparation for Living, but Living itself, made up of Things different? Just as if a Champion, when he enters the Lifts, should fall a crying, because he is not exercising without. It was for this, that you used to be exercised. For this, were the Poisers, the Dust (c), the young Fellows, your Antagonists. And do you now feek for thefe, when it is the Time for Bufiness? This is just as if, in the Topic of Affent, when we are prefented with Appearances, of which fome are evidently true, others not, inftead of diffinguishing them, we should want to read Differtations on Evidence.

§. 2. What then is the Cause of this? That we have neither read nor written, in order to treat the Appearances that occur to us, conformably to Nature, in our Behaviour. But we stop at learning what is said, and being able to explain it to others; at solving Syllogisms, and ranging hypothetical

⁽c) The Olympic Champions used to rub themselves with Dust and Sand: which, as they were anointed, was necessary to give them the better Hold on each other. See Mr. Upton's Note on L. III. c. 15. p. 419. l. 10.

Arguments. Hence, where the Study is, there too is the Do you defire abfolutely what is out of your Power? Be reftrained then, be hindered, be disappointed. But if we read Differtations about the Exertion of the Efforts, not merely to fee what is faid about the Efforts, but to exert them well: on Defire and Aversion, that we may not be disappointed of our Defires, nor incur our Averfions: on the Duties of Life, that, mindful of our Relations, we may do nothing irrationally, nor contrary to them: we should not be provoked at being hindered in our Reading; but should be contented with the Performance of Actions fuitable to us, and should not compute as we have hitherto been accustomed to compute. "To-day I have " read fo many Lines; I have written fo many;" but, " To-day I have used my Efforts as the Philosophers direct. " I have restrained my Desires absolutely; I have applied my " Aversion only to Things dependent on Choice. I have not " been terrified by fuch a one, nor put out of Countenance " by fuch another. I have exercised my Patience, my Abstin-" ence, my Beneficence." And thus we should thank God for what we ought to thank him. But now we refemble the Vulgar in another Way alfo, and do not know it. One is afraid, that he shall not be in Power; you (d), that you shall. By no means be afraid of it, Man; but as you laugh at bim, laugh at your felf. For there is no Difference, whether you thirst, like one in a Fever, or dread Water, like him who is bit by a mad Dog. Elfe, how can you fay, like Socrates, " If it so pleases God, so let it be?" Do you think, that ⁽d) The Translation follows the Conjecture of Wolfius.

Socrates, if he had fixed his Defires on the Leifure of the Lycèum, or the Academy, or the Conversation of the Youth there, Day after Day, would have made so many Campaigns as he did so readily? Would not he have lamented and groaned; "How wretched am I! now must I be miserable "here, when I might be sunning myself in the Lycèum?" Was that your Business in Life then, to sun yourself? Was it not to be prosperous? To be unrestrained? Unhindered? And how could he have been Socrates, if he had lamented thus? How could he, after that, have written Pæans in a Prisson?

§. 3. In short then, remember this, that whatever external to your own Choice you esteem, you destroy that Choice. And not only Power is external to it, but the being out of Power too: not only Bufiness, but Leifure too .- " Then, " must I live in this Tumult now?" --- What do you call a Tumult?--- "A Multitude of People."--- And where is the Hardship? Suppose it is the Olympic Games. Think it a public Affembly. There too fome bawl out one Thing, fome do another; fome push the rest. The Baths are crowded. Yet who of us is not pleafed with these Assemblies, and doth not grieve to leave them? Do not be hard to please, and squeamish at what happens. " Vinegar is " disagreeable, [says one]; for it is sour. Honey is dis-" greeable, fays a fecond; for it diforders my Constitution. " I do not like Vegetables, fays a third. Thus too [fay " others] I do not like Retirement; it is a Defart: I do not " like a Crowd; it is a Tumult."—Why, if Things are fo disposed, that you are to live alone, or with few, call this Condition, Condition, a Repose; and make use of it as you ought. Talk with yourfelf: exercise the Appearances presented to your Mind: work up your Pre-conceptions to Accuracy. But if you light on a Crowd, call it one of the public Games, a grand Affembly, a Festival. Endeavour to share in the Festival with the rest of the World. For what Sight is more pleafant to a Lover of Mankind, than a great Number of Men? We see Companies of Oxen, or Horses, with Pleasure. We are highly delighted to fee a great many Ships. Who is forry to fee a great many Men?-" But they frun me with "their Noife,"-Then your Hearing is hindered; and what is that to you? Is your Faculty of making a right Use of the Appearances of Things hindered too? Or who can restrain you from using your Desire and Aversion, your Powers of Pursuit and Avoidance, conformable to Nature? What Turnult is fufficient for this? Do but remember the general Rules. What is mine? What not mine? What is allotted me? What is the Will of God, that I should do now? What is not His Will? A little while ago it was His Will, that you should be at leifure, should talk with yourself, write about these Things, read, hear, prepare yourself. You have had fufficient Time for this. At prefent He favs to you, " Come now to the Combat. Show us what you have learned; "how you have wreftled." How long would you exercise by yourfelf? It is now the Time to flow, whether you are of the Number of these Champions who merit Victory, or of those who go about the World, conquered in all the Games round. Why then are you out of Humour? There is no Combat without a Tumult. There must be many preparatory Exercises, many Acclamations, many Masters, many Ссс Spectators.

Spectators.—" But I would live in Quiet."—Why then, lament and groan, as you deferve. For what greater Punishment is there to the Uninstructed, and Difodesient to the Orders of God, than to grieve, to mourn, to envy; in short, to be disappointed, and unhappy? Are not you willing to deliver yourself from all this?—" And how shall I deliver "myself?"—Have not you heard, that you must absolutely with-hold Desire, and apply Aversion to such Things only, as are dependent on Choice? That you must give up all, Body, Possessions, Fame, Books, Tumults, Power, Exemption from Power? For to whichsoever your Propension is, you are a Slave; you are under Subjection; you are made liable to Restraint, to Compulsion; you are altogether the Property of others. But have that of Cleanthes always ready.

Conduct me, Jove; and Thou, O Destiny.

Is it Your Will, that I should go to Rome? Conduct me to Rome. To Gyaras?—To Gyaras. To Athens.
To Prison?—To Prison. If you once say, "When is one "to go to Athens?" you are undone. This Desire, if it be unaccomplished, must necessarily render you disappointed; and, if sulfilled, vain on what ought not to elate you: on the contrary, if you are hindered, wretched, by incurring what you do not like. Therefore give up all these Things.—"Athens is a sine Place."—But it is a much siner Thing to be happy, impassive, tranquil, not to have what concerns you dependent on others.—"Rome is full of Tumults and "Vists."—But Prosperity is worth all Difficulties. If then it be a proper Time for these, why do not you withdraw.

draw your Aversion from them? (What Necessity is there for you to be made to carry your Burden, by being cudgelled, like an Asi?) Otherwise consider, that you must always be a Slave to him, who hath the Power to procure your Discharge, to every one who hath the Power of hindering you; and must worship him, like your evil Genius.

§. 4. The only Way to real Proferity (let this Rule be at hand Morning, Noon, and Night,) is, a Refignation of Things independent on Choice; to efteem nothing as a Property; to deliver up all Things to our tutelar Genius, and to Fortune; to make those the Governors of them, whom Jupiter hath made so; to be ourselves devoted to that only, which is our Property; to that which is intapable of Refiraint; and whatever we read, or write, or hear, to refer all to this.

§. 5. Therefore I cannot call any one industrious, if I hear only that he reads, or writes; nor even if he adds the whole Night to the Day, do I call him fo, unless I know to what he refers it. For not even you would call Him industrious, who fits up for the Sake of a Girl; nor therefore in the other Case do I. But, if he doth it for Fame, I call him ambitious; if for Money, avaritious; if from the Desire of Learning, bookish; but not industrious. But, if he refers his Labour to his ruling Faculty, in order to treat and regulate it conformably to Nature, then only I call him industrious. For never either praise or blame any Person, on account of Orthodox of Principles. These are the peculiar Property of each Individual, and the Things which make Actions good or bad.

Ccc 2 §. 6.

§. 6. Mindful of this, be pleafed with the present, and contented with whatever it is the Season for. If you perceive any of those Things, which you have learned and studied, occurng to you in Action, rejoice in them. If you have laid aside Ill-nature and Reviling; if you have lessened your Harshness, indecent Language, Inconsiderateness, Effeminacy; if you are not moved by the fame Things as formerly; if not in the same Manner as formerly; you may keep a perpetual Festival: To-day, because you have behaved well in one Affair: To-morrow, because in another. How much better a Reason for Sacrifice is this, than obtaining a Consulship, or a Government? These Things you have from yourfelf, and from the Gods. Remember this, Who it is that gave them, and to whom, and for what Purpofe. Habituated once to these Reasonings, can you still think there is any Difference, in what Place you are to please God? Are not the Gods every-where at the same Distance? Do not they every-where equally fee what is doing?

CHAPTER V.

Concerning the Quarrelfome, and Ferocious.

§. 1. Wife and good Person neither quarrels with any one himself, nor, as far as possible, suffers an other. The Life of Socrates affords us an Example of this too, as well as of the other [Virtues]; who not only everywhere avoided Quarrelling himself, but did not even suffer others to quarrel. See in Xenophon's Symposium, how many Quarrels he ended; how, again, he bore with Thrasymachus, with Polius, with Callicles; how, with his Wise; how, with his his Son, who attempted to confute him, and cavilled with him. For he well remembered, that no one is Master of the ruling Faculty of another; and therefore he defired nothing but what was his own. --- "And what is that?" --- Not that this [or that] Person (a) should be moved conformably to Nature; for that belongs to others; but that while they act in their own Way, as they please, he should nevertheless be affected, and live conformably to Nature, only doing what belongs to himself, in order to make them too live conformably to Nature. For this is the Point, that a wife and good Person hath in View. To have the Command of an Army? No: but if it be allotted him, to preferve on this Subject of Action, the right Conduct of his own ruling Faculty. To marry? No: but if a Marriage be allotted him, to preserve himself, on this Subject of Action, conformable to Nature. But, if he would have his Wife, or his Child, exempt from Fault, he would have that his own, which belongs to others. And being inftructed confifts in this very Point, To learn what Things are our own, and what belong to others.

§. 2. What Room is there then for Quarrelling, to a Person Doth it appear new to him? Doth not he expect worse and more grievous Injuries from bad People, than happen to him? Doth he not reckon it so much gained, as they come short of the last Extremities? Such a one hath reviled you.—You are much obliged to him, that he hath struck you.—But he hath struck you too.—You are much obliged to him, that he hath not wounded you too .--- But he hath wounded you too .--- You are much obliged to him, that he hath not killed For when did he ever learn, or from whom, that he is a gentle, that he is a focial Animal: that the very Injury itself is a great Mischief to the Injurious? As then he hath not learned these Things, nor believes them, why should he not follow what appears for his Interest? Your Neighbour hath thrown Stones. What then? Is it any Fault of yours? But your Goods are broken. What then? Are you a Piece of Furniture? No: but your Effence confifts in the Faculty of Choice. What Behaviour then is affigned you, in Return? If you confider yourfelf as a Wolf---to bite again, to throw more Stones. But if you ask the Question, as a Man, examine your Treasure: see what Faculties you have brought into the World with you. Are they Dispositions to Ferocity? To Revenge? When is a Horse miserable? When he is deprived of his natural Faculties. Not when he cannot crow, but when he cannot run. And a Dog? not when he cannot fly, but when he cannot hunt. Is not a Man then also unhappy in the same manner? Not he, who cannot strangle Lions, or grasp Statues (b), (for he hath received no Faculties for this Purpose from Nature;) but who hath lost his Rectitude of Mind, his Fidelity. Such a one is the Perfon, who ought to be publicly lamented, for the Misfortunes into which he is fallen: not, by Heaven, either he who is born (c) or dies; but he, whom it hath befallen while he lives to

⁽a) Perhaps for kirn outes ti, should be read, kirntal outes; and the Translation follows this Conjecture.

(b) Like Hercules and Diogenes. See p. 260. Note (b).

⁽c) An Allufion to a Paffage in Euripides. The general Sense of which is, That we ought to lament the Person who is born, from a Confidera-to lose what is properly his own: not his paternal Possesfions, his paultry Estate, or his House, his Lodging, or his Slaves, (for none of these are a Man's own; but all belonging to others, fervile, dependent, and given at different Times, to different Perfons, by the Disposers of them;) but his personal Qualifications as a Man, the Impressions which he brought into the World stampt upon his Mind: such as we feek in Money; and, if we find them, allow it to be good; if not, throw it away. "What Impression hath this " Piece of Money?"—" Trajan's." "Give it me."— " Nero's (d)." Throw it away. It is false: it is good for nothing. So in the other Case. "What Impression have " his Principles?" "Gentleness, social Affection, Patience. " Good-nature." Bring them hither. I receive them. I make fuch a Man a Citizen; I receive him for a Neighbour, a fellow Traveller. Only fee that he hath not the Neronian Impression. Is he passionate? Is he resentful? Is he querulous? Would he, if he took the Fancy, break the Head of those who fall in his Way? Why then do you call him a Man? For is every thing distinguished by the mere outward Form? Then fay, just as well, that a Piece of Wax is an Apple, or that it hath the Smell and Tafte too. But the tion of the Evils into which he is coming, and to rejoice over the Dead, who is at rest from his Labours. UPTON.

There is an Account in Herodotus, of a People of Thrace, who used to affemble, and condole with a Family where any one was born; and, on the contrary, express great Joy and Congratulation where-ever there happened a Death. L. 5. c. 4.

⁽d) Nero being declared an Enemy by the Senate, his Coin was, in confequence of this, prohibited and destroyed.

external Figure is not enough: nor, confequently, is it fufficient to make a Man, that he hath a Nofe and Eyes, if he hath not the proper Principles of a Man. Such a one doth not underfland Reafon, or apprehend when he is confuted. He is an Afs. Another is dead to the Senfe of Shame. He is a worthless Creature (e); any thing, rather than a Man. Another feeks whom he may kick or bite: fo that he is neither Sheep nor Afs. But what then? He is a wild Beaft.

§. 3. "Well: but would you have me despised then?" -By whom? By those who know you? And how can They despife you, who know you to be gentle and modest? But, perhaps, by those who do not know you? And what is that to You? For no other Artist troubles himself about the Ignorant.---" But People will be much the readier to " attack me." --- Why do you fay me? Can any one hurt your Choice, or reftrain you from treating conformably to Nature, the Appearances that are prefented to you? Why then are you disturbed, and desirous to make yourself appear formidable? Why do not you make public Proclamation, that you are at peace with all Mankind, however they may act; and that you chiefly laugh at those, who suppose they can hurt you. "These Wretches neither know, who I am, " or in what confift my Good and Evil; or that there is no " Access for them to what is really mine." Thus the Inhabitants of a fortified City laugh at the Befiegers. " What ⁽r) The Name of fome Animal would fuit better here, than the Epithet αχρηστοι. But χοιροι, a Hog, is a Word too unlike; and I can think of no better.

"Trouble now are these People giving themselves for nothing? Our Wall is secure; we have Provisions for a "very long Time, and every other Preparation." These are what render a City fortified, and impregnable: but nothing but its Principles render the human Soul so. For what Wall is so strong, what Body so impenetrable, or what Possessian soul for unalicanable, or what Dignity so secured against Stratagems? All Things elfe, every-where else, are mortal, easily reduced; and whoever, in any degree, fixes his Mind upon them, must necessarily be subject to Perturbation, Despair, Terrors, Lamentations, disappointed Desires, and incurred Aversions.

8. 4. And will we not fortify then the only Place of Security, that is granted us; and, withdrawing ourselves from what is mortal and fervile, diligently improve what is immortal, and by Nature free? Do we not remember, that no one either hurts or benefits another: but the Principle, which we hold concerning every thing, doth it? It is this that hurts us; this that overturns us. Here is the Fight, the Sedition, the War. It was nothing elfe, that made Eteocles and Polynices Enemies, but their Principle concerning Empire, and their Principle concerning Exile: that the one feemed the extremest Evil; the other, the greatest Good. Now the very Nature of every one is to purfue Good, to avoid Evil; to efteem him as an Enemy and Betrayer, who deprives us of the one, and involves us in the other, though he be a Brother, or a Son, or Father. For nothing is more nearly related to us than Good. So that if Good and Evil confift in Externals, there is no Affection between Father and Son, Brother and Brother; but all is every-where full of Enemies, Betrayers, Sycophants. But if a right Choice be the only Good, and a wrong one the only Evil, what further Room is there for Quarrelling, for Reviling? About what? About what is nothing to us? Againft whom? Againft the Ignorant, againft the Unhappy, againft those who are deceived in Things of the greatest Importance?

- §. 5. Mindful of this, Socrates lived in his own House, patiently bearing a furious Wise, a senseles son. For what were the Effects of her Fury? The Throwing as much Water as she pleased on his Head, the Trampling (f) a Cake under her Feet. "And what is this to me, if I think such Things "nothing to me? This very Point is my Bussiness: and "neither a Tyrant, nor a Master, shall restrain my Will; "nor Multitudes, though I am a single Person; nor one "ever so strong, though I am ever so weak. For this is "given by God to every one, free from Restraint."
- §. 6. These Principles make Friendship in Families, Concord in Cities, Peace in Nations. They make a Person grateful to God, every-where in good Spirits, [about Externals,] as belonging to others, as of no Value. But we, alas! are able indeed to write and read these Things, and to praise them when they are read; but very far from being convinced by them. Therefore what is said of the Lacedemonians, ⁽f) Alcibiades fent a fine great Cake, as a Prefent to Socrates: which to provoked the Jealoufy of the meek Xantippe, that fhe threw it down, and flampt upon it. Socrates only laughed, and faid, "Now you will have no Share in it yourfelf." Upron from ELIAN.

Lions at Home, Foxes at Ephefus, may be applied to us too: Lions in the School, but Foxes out of it.

CHAPTER VI.

Concerning Those who grieve at being pitied.

§. 1. TT vexes me, fay you, to be pitied. Is this your Affair then, or theirs, who pity you? And further: How is it in your Power to prevent it?-" It is, if I show "them, that I do not need Pity."-But are you now in fuch a Condition, as not to need Pity, or are you not?----" I think I am. But these People do not pity me for what, " if any thing, would deferve Pity, my Faults; but for " Poverty, and Want of Power, and Sicknesses, and Deaths, " and other Things of that Kind." --- Are you then prepared to convince the World, that none of these Things is in reality an Evil: but that it is possible for a Person to be happy, even when he is poor, and without Honours, and Power? Or are you prepared to appear to them, rich and powerful? The last of these is the Part of an arrogant, filly, worthless Fellow. Observe too, by what Means this Fiction must be carried on. You must hire some paultry Slaves, and get possessed of a few little Pieces of Plate, and often show them in Public; and, though they are the same, endeayour to conceal that they are the fame: you must have gay Clothes, and other Finery; and make a Show of being honoured by your great People; and endeavour to sup with them, or be thought to fup with them; and use some vile Arts with your Person, to make it appear handsomer and genteeler than it really is. All this you must contrive, if you would take the fecond Way not to be pitied. And the first is impracticable, as well as tedious, to undertake the very Thing, that Jupiter himself could not do: to convince all Mankind what Things are really good and evil. Is this granted you? The only Thing granted you is, to convince yourself: and you have not yet done that: and do you, notwithstanding, undertake to convince others? Why, who hath lived fo long with you, as you have with yourself? Who is fo likely to have Faith in you, in order to be convinced by you, as you in yourself? Who is a better Wisher, or a nearer Friend to you, than you to yourfelf? How is it then, that you have not vet convinced yourfelf? Should not you (a) now turn these Things every Way in your Thoughts? What you were studying was this: to learn to be exempt from Grief. Perturbation, and Meanness, and to be free. Have not you heard then, that the only Way that leads to this is, to give up what doth not depend on Choice: to withdraw from it; and confess, that it belongs to others? What kind of Thing then is another's Opinion about you?-" Inde-" pendent on Choice."—Is it nothing then to you? " Nothing."-While you are still piqued and disturbed about it then, do you think, that you are convinced concerning Good and Evil.

⁽a) The Text here is either corrupt, or very elliptical and obscure; and the Translation conjectural. A γου κατω hath the same Sense in the next Page but one, which is assigned to it here. The και before καιθαικοί is omitted, as being probably a Corruption of the last Syllable of the preceding Word, written twice over. Mr. Upton's MS. cuts the Difficulty short, by leaving out several Words; in consequence of which, the Translation would be; Hou is it then, that you have not yet brought your-felf to learn to be exempt, &c.

Chap. 6. EPICTETUS.

§. 2. Letting others alone then, why will you not be your own Scholar and Teacher? Let others look to it, whether it be for their Advantage to think and act contrary to Nature: but no one is nearer to me than myfelf. What then is the Meaning of this? I have heard the Reasonings of Philosophers, and affented to them: yet, in fact, I am never the more relieved. Am I fo flupid? And yet in other Things, that I had an Inclination to, I was not found very flupid: but I quickly learned Grammar, and the Exercises of the Palastra, and Geometry, and the Solution of Syllogisms. Hath not Reason then convinced me? And yet there is no one of the other Things, that I fo much approved or liked from the very first. And now I read concerning these Subjects. I hear Discourses upon them, I write about them, and I have not yet found any Reafoning of greater Strength than this. What then do I want? Is it not, that the contrary Principles are not removed out of my Mind? Is it not, that I have not strengthened these Opinions by Exercise, nor accustomed them to occur in Action; but, like Arms thrown afide, they are grown rufty, and do not fit me? Yet neither in the Palæstra, nor writing, nor reading, nor folving Syllogisms, am I contented with mere Learning: but I turn the Arguments every Way, which are prefented to me, and I compose others; and the same of convertible Propositions. But the necessary Theorems, by which I might become exempted from Fear, Grief, Passion, unrestrained and free, I neither exercise, nor study, with a proper Application. And then I trouble myfelf, what others will fay of me; whether I shall appear to them worthy of Regard; whether I shall appear happy .- Will you not fee, Wretch, what you can fay of yourfelf? What Sort of Person you appear to your-felf, in your Opinions, in your Destres, in your Aversions, in your Pursuits, in your Preparation, in your Intention, in the other proper Works of a Man? But, instead of that, do you trouble yourself, whether others pity you?—" Very "true. But I am pitied improperly."—Then are not you pained by this? And is not he who is in Pain, to be pitied.—" Yes."—How then are you pitied improperly? For you render yourself worthy of Pity by what you suffer upon being pitied.

§. 3. What fays Antifthenes then? Have you never " heard? It is Kingly, O Cyrus, to do well, and to be " ill spoken of." My Head is well, and all around me think it akes. What is that to me? I am free from a Fever; and they compassionate me, as if I had one. " Poor Soul, what a long while have you had this Fever!" I say too, with a difmal Countenance, Ay, indeed, it is now a long time that I have been ill. --- "What can be the Con-" fequence then?"-What pleases God. And at the same time I fecretly laugh at them, who pity me. What forbids then, but that the same may be done in the other Case? I am poor: but I have right Principles concerning Poverty. What is it to me then, if People pity me for my Poverty? I am not in Power, and others are: but I have fuch Opinions as Lought to have concerning Power, and the Want of Power. Let them fee to it, who pity me. But I am neither hungry, nor thirfty, nor cold. But, because they are hungry and thirfty, they suppose me to be so too. What can I do for them then? Am I to go about, making Proclamation, and faying, Do not not deceive yourselves, good People, I am very well: I regard neither Poverty, nor Want of Power, nor any thing elfe, but right Principles. These I possess unrestrained. I care for nothing farther .- But what Trifling is this? How have I right Principles, when I am not contented to be what I am; but am out of my Wits, how I shall appear? -But others will get more, and be preferred to me.-Why, what is more reasonable, than that they who take Pains for any thing, should get most in that Particular, in which they take Pains? They have taken Pains for Power; you, for right Principles: they, for Riches; you, for a proper Use of the Appearances of Things. See whether they have the Advantage of you in that, for which you have taken Pains, and which they neglect: if they affent better, concerning the natural Bounds and Limits of Things; if their Defires are lefs difappointed than yours, their Aversions lefs incurred; if they take a better Aim in their Intention, in their Purpofes, in their Pursuits: whether they preserve a becoming Behaviour, as Men, as Sons, as Parents, and fo on in respect of the other Relations of Life. But, if they are in Power, and you not (b): why will you not speak the Truth to yourself; that you do nothing for the Sake of Power; but that they do every thing? And it is very unreasonable, that he who carefully feeks any thing, should be less successful than he who neglects it .- " No: but, fince I take Care to have " right Principles, it is more reasonable, that I should have ⁽b) I have translated thus, on the Supposition, that ω in the Original ought to be repeated.

" Power."-Yes, in respect to what you take Care about, your Principles. But give up to others the Things, in which they have taken more Care than you. Else it is just as if, because you have right Principles, you should think it fit, that, when you shoot an Arrow, you should hit the Mark better than an Archer, or that you should forge better than a Smith. Therefore let alone taking Pains about Principles, and apply yourfelf to the Things which you wish to possess, and then fall a crying, if you do not fucceed; for you deferve to cry. But now you fay, that you are engaged in other Things; intent upon other Things: and it is a true Saying, that one Bufiness doth not fuit with another. One Man, as soon as he rife and goes out, feeks to whom he may pay his Compliments; whom he may flatter; to whom he may fend a Present; how he may please the Dancer [in Vogue]; how, by doing ill-natured Offices to one, he may oblige another. When-ever he prays, he prays for Things like thefe: whenever he facrifices, he facrifices for Things like thefe. To these he transfers the Pythagorean Precept;

Let not the stealing God of Sleep surprise, &c.

(c) Where have I failed in Point of Flattery? What have I done? Any thing like a free, brave-pirited Man? If he should find any thing of this Sort, he rebukes and accuses himself. "What Business had you to say that? For could not you have lied? Even the Philosophers say, there is no Objection against telling a Lye."

⁽c) See the Pythagorean Verfes (quoted in B. III. c. 10.) of which these Questions are a Parody,

- §. 4. But on the other hand, if you have in reality been careful about nothing elfe, but to make a right Use of the Appearance of Things; as soon as you are up in a Morning, confider, what do I want in order to be free from Passion? What, to enjoy Tranquillity? What am I? Am I mere worthless Body? Am I Estate? Am I Reputation? None of these. What then? I am a reasonable Creature. What then is required of me? Recollect your Actions. Where have I done, either unfriendly, or unsociable? What have I omitted, that was necessary in these Points?
- §. 5. Since there is so much Difference then in your Defires, your Actions, your Wishes, would you yet have an equal Share with others in those Things, about which you have not taken Pains, and they have? And do you wonder, after all, and are you out of Humour, if they pity you? But they are not out of Humour, if you pity them. Why? Because they are convinced, that they are in Possession of their proper Good; but you are not convinced that you are. Hence you are not contented with your own Condition; but desire theirs: whereas they are contented with theirs, and do not desire yours. For, if you were really convinced, that it is you who are in Possession of what is good, and that they are mistaken, you would not so much as think what they say about you.

CHAPTER VII.

Of Fearlessness.

§. 1. THAT makes a Tyrant formidable? His Guards, fay you, and their Swords; they who belong to the Bed-chamber; and they who shut out those, who would go in. What is the Reason then, that, if you bring a Child to him when he is furrounded by his Guards, it is not afraid? Is it because the Child doth not know what they mean? Suppose then, that any one doth know what is meant by Guards, and that they are armed with Swords; and, for that very Reason, comes in the Tyrant's Way, being desirous, on account of fome Misfortune, to die, and feeking to die eafily by the Hand of another: Doth fuch a Man fear the Guards? No: for he wants the very Thing, that renders them formidable, Well then: if any one, without an absolute Desire to live or die, but, as it may happen, comes in the Way of a Tyrant, what reftrains his approaching him without Fear? If then another should think concerning his Estate, or Wife, or Children, as this Man doth concerning his Body; and, in fhort, from fome Madness or Folly, should be of fuch a Disposition, as not to care whether he hath them, or hath them not; but, as Children, playing with Shells, make a Difference indeed in the Play, but do not trouble themselves about the Shells; so he should pay no Regard to the Materials [of Action]; but apply himself to the playing with, and Management of, them; what Tyrant, what Guards, or their Swords, are any longer formidable to fuch a Man?

§. 2. And is it possible, that any one should be thus disposed towards these Things from Madnes (a); and the Galileans, from mere Habit; yet that no one should be able to learn, from Reason and Demonstration, that God made all Things in the World, and the whole World itself, unrestrained and perfect; and all its Parts for the Use of the Whole? All other Creatures are indeed excluded from a Power of comprehending the Administration of the World; but a reasonable Being hath Abilities for the Consideration of all these Things: both that it [self] is a Part, and what Part; and that it is fit the Parts should submit to the Whole. Besides, being by Nature constituted noble, magnanimous, and free, it sees, that, of the Things which relate to it, some are unrestrained and in its own Power, some

⁽a) Epictetus, probably, means, not any remaining Disciples of Judas of Galilee, but the Christians, whom Julian afterwards affected to call Galileans. It helps to confirm this Opinion, that M. Antoninus (L. 2. §. 3.) mentions them, by their proper Name of Christians, as suffering Death out of mere Obstinacy. It would have been more reasonable, and more worthy the Character of these great Men, to have enquired into the Principles, on which the Christians refused to worship Heathen Deities, and by which they were enabled to support their Sufferings with such amazing Conftancy, than rafhly to pronounce their Behaviour the Effect of Obstinacy and Habit. Epictetus and Antoninus were too exact Judges of Human Nature, not to know, that Ignominy, Tortures, and Death, are not, merely on their own Account, Objects of Choice: nor could the Records of any Time, or Nation, furnith them with an Example of Multitudes of Persons of both Sexes, of all Ages, Ranks, and natural Dispositions, in distant Countries, and successive Periods, resigning whatever is most valuable and dear to the Heart of Man, from a Principle of Obllinacy, or the mere Force of Habit: not to fay, that Habit could have no Influence on the first Sufferers.

reftrained, and in the Power of others: the unreftrained, fuch as depend on Choice; the reftrained, fuch as do not depend on it. And, for this Reafon, if it efteems its Good and its Intereft to confift in Things unreftrained, and in its own Power, it will be free, profperous, happy, unhurt, magnanimous, pious; thankful (b) to God for every thing; never, finding fault with any thing, never cenfuring any thing that is brought to pass by him. But, if it efteems its Good, and its Interest, to confist in Externals, and Things independent on Choice, it must necessarily be restrained, be hindered, be enslaved to those who have the Power over those Things which it admires, and sears; it must necessarily be impious, as supposing itself injured by God, and unequitable, as claiming more than its Share; it must necessarily too be abject, and mean-spirited.

§. 3. What forbids, but that he, who diffinguishes these Things, may live with an easy and light Heart, quietly expecting whatever may happen, and bearing contentedly what hath happened? Would you have Poverty [be my Lot]? Bring it; and you shall see what Poverty is, when it hath got one to act it well. Would you have Power? Bring Toils too along with it. Banishment? Where-ever I go, it will be well with me there: for it was well with me here, not on account of the Place, but of the Principles, which I shall carry away with me; for no one can deprive me of these: on the contrary, they alone are my Property, and cannot be taken away; and retaining them, suffices me where-ever I am, or what-ever I do. -- " But it is now time "to die."—What is it that you call dying (c)? Do not talk of the Thing in a Tragedy Strain; but fay, as the Truth is, that it is Time for a compound Piece of Matter to be refolved back into its Original. And where is the Terror of this? What Part of the World is going to be loft? What is going to happen new, or prodigious? Is it for this, that a Tyrant is formidable? Is it on this Account, that the Swords of his Guards feem fo large and sharp? Try these Things upon others. For my Part, I have examined the Whole. No one hath an Authority over me. God hath made me free: I know his Commands: after this, no one can enflave me. I have a proper Affertor of my Freedom; proper Judges. Is it not of my Body, that you are the Master? What is that to me then? Of that Trifle my Estate? What is that to me then? Is it not of Banishment and Chains, that you are the Master? Why, all these again, and my whole Body I give up to you: when-ever you please, make a Trial of your Power, and you will find how far it extends.

⁽b) This agrees with Epb. v. 20. Giving Thanks always for all Things unto God......

§.4. Whom then can I any longer fear? Those who belong to the Bed-chamber? Lest they should do—What? Shut me out? If they sind me desirous to come in, let them.

"Why do you come to the Door then?"—Because it is fitting for me, that while the Play lasts, I should play too.

"How then are you incapable of being shut out?"—Because, if I am not admitted, I would not wish to go in; but would much rather, that Things should be as they are:

⁽c) The Translation here follows Mr. Upton's Manuscript, and Emendation.

for I efteem what God wills, to be better than what I will (d). I give myfelf up a Servant and a Follower to Him. I purfue, I defire, in fhort, I will along with Him. Being shut out doth not relate to me; but to those who push to get in. Why then do not I push too? Because I know, that there is not any Good distributed there to those who get in. But when I hear any one congratulated on the Favour of Cafar, I fav. What hath he got ?---" A Province (e)."--- Hath he then got fuch Principles too, as he ought to have?-- "A public " Charge."-Hath he then got with it the Knowlege how to use it too? If not, why should I be thrust about any longer to get in? Some one scatters Nuts and Figs. Children scramble and quarrel for them; but not Men: for they think them But, if any one should scatter Shells, not even Children would scramble for these. Provinces are distributing. Let Children look to it. Moncy. Let Children look to it. Military Command, a Confulship. Let Children scramble for them. Let these be shut out, be beat, kiss the Hands of the Giver, of his Slaves. But to me, they are but mere Figs and Nuts .-- " What then is to be done?" -- If you miss them, while he is throwing them, do not trouble yourfelf about it: but, if a Fig should sall into your Lap, take it, and eat it; for one may pay fo much Regard even to a Fig. But, if I am to floop and throw down one, or be thrown down by another, and flatter those who are got in, a Fig is not worth this, nor any other of the Things which are not really good, and which the Philosophers have perfuaded me not to effect as good.

⁽d) Nevertheless not as I will, but as Thou will. Matth. xxvi. 39.

⁽e) The Translation of this Passage follows the Conjecture of Wolfins.

8. 5. Show me the Swords of the Guards.--- "See " how big, and how sharp they are."-What then do these great and sharp Swords do?-" They kill."-And what doth a Fever do?-" Nothing elfe."-And a Tile?--" Nothing elfe,"--Would you have me then be ftruck with an awful Admiration of all these, and worship them, and go about a Slave to them all? Heaven forbid! But, having once learnt, that every thing that is born must likewife die, (that the World may not be at a Stand, or the Course of it hindered), I no longer make any Difference. whether this be effected by a Fever, or a Tile, or a Soldier: but, if any Comparison is to be made, I know, that the Soldier will effect it with less Pain, and more speedily. Since then I neither fear any of those Things, which he can inflict upon me, nor covet any thing which he can bestow, why do I fland any longer in Awe of a Tyrant? Why am I struck with Aftonishment? Why do I fear his Guards? Why do I rejoice, if he speaks kindly to me, and receives me graciously; and relate to others, in what Manner he spoke to me? For is He Socrates, or Diogenes, that his Praise should show what I am? Or have I fet my Heart on imitating his Manners? But, to keep up the Play, I go to him, and ferve him, as long as he commands nothing unreasonable or improper, But, if he should say to me, " Go to Salamis, and bring "Leo (f)," I answer him, Seek another, for I play no longer. -" Lead him away."-I follow, in Sport.-" But " your Head will be taken off."-And will his own always remain on; or yours, who obey him?—" But you will be "thrown out, unburied."—If I am the Corpfe, I fhall be thrown out; but if I am fomething else than the Corpfe (g), fpeak more handsomely, as the Thing is, and do not think to fright me. These Things are frightful to Children and Fools. But if any one, who hath once entered into the School of a Philosopher, doth not know what he himself is, he deserves to be frighted, and to flatter what he lately flattered; if he hath not yet learnt, that he is neither Flesh, nor Bones, nor Nerves; but that which makes use of these, and regulates and comprehends the Appearances of Things.

⁽¹⁾ An Allufion to the Story, mentioned in the first Chapter of this Book, p. 365. Note (e).

§. 6. "Well: but these Reasonings make Men despise the " Laws."-And what Reasonings then render those, who use them, more obedient to the Laws? But the Law of Fools is no Law. And yet, fee how these Reasonings render us properly disposed, even towards such Persons, since they teach us, not to claim, in Opposition to them, any thing wherein they have it in their Power to be superior to us. They teach us to give up Body, to give up Estate, Children, Parents, Brothers, to yield every thing, to let go every thing, excepting only Principles; which even Jupiter hath excepted, and decreed to be every one's own Property. What Unreasonableness, what Breach of the Laws, is there in this? Where you are superior and stronger, there I give way to you: Where, on the contrary, I am fuperior, do you fubmit to me; for this hath been my Study, and not yours. Your Study hath been to walk upon a Mofaic Floor, to be attended by your Servants and Clients, to wear fine Clothes, to have a great Number of Hunters, Fidlers, and Players. lay any Claim [to these?] But [on the other hand,] have you then studied Principles, or even your own rational Faculty? Do you know, of what Parts it confifts? How they are connected; what are its Articulations; what Powers it hath, and of what Kind? Why then do you take it amis, if another, who hath studied them, hath the Advantage of you in these Things ?--- " But they are of all Things the "greateft,"-Well: and who reftrains you from being conversant with them, and attending to them ever so carefully? Or who is better provided with Books, with Leifure, with Affiftants? Only turn your Thoughts now-and-then to these Matters; bestow but a little Time upon your own ruling Faculty. Confider what it is you have, and whence it came, that uses all other Things, that examines them all, that chuses, that rejects. But while you employ yourfelf about Externals, you will have those indeed, such as no one else hath; but your ruling Faculty, such as you like to have it, fordid and neglected.

⁽g) See p. 326. Note (w).

CHAPTER VIII.

Concerning Such as hastily run into the philosophic Dress.

§. 1. EVER commend or cenfure any one for common Actions, nor afcribe them either to Skilfulness or Unskilfulness; and thus you will at once be free both from Rafhness and Ill-nature. Such a one bathes in a mighty little Time. Doth he therefore do it ill? Not at all. But what? In a mighty little Time. " Is every thing well "done then?"—By no means. But what is done from good Principles is well done; what from bad ones, ill. But till you know from what Principle any one acts, neither commend nor cenfure the Action. But the Principle is not eafily judged of from the external Appearances. Such a one is a Carpenter. Why? He uses an Axe. What signifies that? Such a one is a Musician: for he sings. What signifies that? Such a one is a Philosopher. Why? Because he wears a Cloke and long Hair. What then do Mountebanks wear? And fo, when People fee any of these acting indecently, they prefently fay, "See (a) what the Philosopher "doth." But they ought rather, from his acting indecently, to fay, he is no Philosopher. For, if indeed the Idea, which we have of a Philosopher, and his Profession, was, to wear a Cloke and long Hair, they would fay right: but, if it be rather to keep himfelf free from Faults, fince he doth not fulfil his Profession, why do not they deprive him of his Title? For this is the Way with regard to other Arts. When we see any one handle an Axe aukwardly, we do not fay, "Where " is the Use of this Art? See how ill Carpenters perform." But we fay the very contrary: "This Man is no Carpenter; " for he handles an Axe aukwardly." So, if we hear any one fing badly, we do not fay, " Observe how Musicians "fing;" but rather, "This Fellow is no Musician." It is with regard to Philosophy alone, that People are thus affected. When they fee any one acting contrary to the Profession of a Philosopher, they do not take away his Title; but, laying it down, that he is a Philosopher, and then affuming from the very Fact that he behaves indecently, they infer, that Philosophy is of no Use.

⁽a) Perhaps the true Reading is 6 6 φιλοσοφος.

§. 2. "What then is the Reason of this?" Because we pay some Regard to the Pre-conception which we have of a Carpenter, and a Musician, and so of other Artist; but not a Philosopher; which being thus vague and confused, we judge of it only from external Appearances. And of what other Art do we take up our Judgment from the Dress and the Hair? Hath it not Theorems too, and Materials, and an End, [to distinguish it?] What then is the Subject-matter of a Philosopher? Is it a Cloke?—No: but Reason. What his End? To wear a Cloke?—No: but to have his Reason correct. What are his Theorems? Are they how to get a great Beard, or long Hair?—No: but rather, as Zeno expresses it, To know the Elements of Reason, what each of them is in particular, and how they are adapted to each other, and what are their Consequences.

§ 3. Why then will you not first see, whether, by acting in an unbecoming Manner, he answers his Profession, and of proceed to blame the Study? Whereas now, when you act soberly yourself, you say, from what he appears to do amis, "Observe the Philosopher!" As if it was decent to call a Person, who doth such Things, a Philosopher. And, again, "This is philosophical!" But you do not say, "Observe the Carpenter, or observe the Musician," when you know one of them to be an Adulterer, or see him to be a Glutton. So, in some small Degree, even You perceive, what the Prosession fion of a Philosopher is; but are missed, and consounded by your own Carelessness. But indeed even they, who are called Philosophers, enter upon their Profession by Things which are common to them with others. As soon as they have put on a Cloke, and let their Beard grow, they cry, "I am " a Philosopher." Yet no one says, "I am a Musician;" because he hath bought a Fiddle and Fiddlessick: nor, "I " am a Smith;" because he is drest in the Vulcanian Cap and Apron. But they take their Name from their Art, not from their Habit.

§. 4. For this Reason, Euphrates was in the Right to sav, " I long endeavoured to conceal my embracing the philo-" fophic Life; and it was of Use to me. For, in the first " place, I knew, that, what I did right, I did it not for " Spectators; but for myfelf. I ate in a proper Manner, for " myfelf. I had a composed Look, and Walk, all for God " and myfelf. Then, as I fought alone, I was alone in " Danger. Philosophy was in no Danger, on my doing any "thing shameful, or unbecoming: nor did I hurt the rest " of the World; which, by offending as a Philosopher, I " might have done. For this Reason, they who were igno-" rant of my Intention, used to wonder, that while I con-" versed, and lived intirely with Philosophers, I never took " up the Character. And where was the Harm, that I " should be discovered to be a Philosopher by my Actions, " and not by the usual Badges. See how I eat, how I drink, " how I fleep, how I bear, how I forbear; how I affift " others; how I make use of my Defires, how of my Aver-" fions; how I preferve the natural and acquired Relations, 2 " without "without Confusion, and without Impediment. Judge of me from hence, if you can. But, if you are so deaf and blind, that you would not suppose Vulcan himself to be a good Smith, unless you saw the Cap upon his Head, where is the Harm of not being found out by so foolish a Judge?"

§. 5. It was thus too that Socrates concealed himself from the Generality: and fome even came and defired him to recommend them to Philosophers. Did he use to be difpleased then, like us; and say, What! do not you take me for a Philosopher? No: he took and recommended them; contented with only being a Philosopher, and rejoicing in not being vexed, that he was not thought one. For he remembered his Bufiness: and what is the Bufiness of a wife and good Man? To have many Scholars? By no means. Let those see to it, who have made this their Study. Well then: is it to be a perfect Master of difficult Theorems? Let others fee to that too. In what then was he, and did he defire to be, fomebody? In what conflituted his Hurt or Advantage. " If, fays he, any one can hurt me, I am doing " nothing. If I depend for my Advantage upon another, I " am nothing. Do I wish for any thing, and it doth not " come to pass? I am unhappy." To such a Combat he invited every one, and in my Opinion, yielded to no one. But do you think it was by making Proclamation, and faying, "I am fuch a one?" Far from it: but by being fuch a one. 'For this, again, is Folly and Infolence to fay, "I am " impassive and undisturbed. Be it known to you, Mortals,

"that while you are fluctuating and buftling about for Things of no Value, I alone am free from all Perturbation."

Are you then so far from being contented with having no Pain yourself, that you must needs make Proclamation:

"Come hither, all you who have the Gout, or the Head-ake,

"or a Fever, or are lame, or blind; and see me free from

"every Distemper." This is vain and shocking, unless you could show, like Affendapins, by what Method of Cure they may presently become as free from Distempers as yourself, and bring your own Health as a Proof of it.

§.6. Such is the Cynic, honoured with the Sceptre and Diadem from Jove: who fays, "That you may fee, O "Mankind, that you do not feek Happinefs and Tranquil-" lity where it is, but where it is not; behold, I am fent an "Example to you, from God; who have neither (b) Estate, "nor House, nor Wise, nor Children, nor even a Bed, or "Coat, or Furniture. And see how healthy I am. Try "me: and, if you see me free from Perturbation, hear "the Remedies, and by what Means I was cured." This now is benevolent and noble. But consider whose Business it is.—Jupiter's, or His whom he judges worthy of this Office; that he may never discover any thing to the World, by which he may invalidate his own Testimony, which he gives for Virtue, and against Externals.

No fickly Pale his beauteous Features wear, Nor from his Cheek he wipes the languid Tear. Homer.

And not only this, but he doth not defire or feek for Company, or Place, or Amufement, as Boys do the Vintage Time, or Holy-Days: always fortified by virtuous Shame, as others are by Walls, and Gates, and Centinels.

⁽b) See p. 292. Note (m).

§. 7. But now they, who have only fuch an Inclination to Philosophy, as bad Stomachs have to some Kinds of Food, of which they will prefently grow fick, immediately run to the Sceptre, to the Kingdom. They let grow their Hair, affume (d) the Cloke, bare the Shoulder, wrangle with all they meet; and even, if they fee any one in a thick warm Coat, wrangle with him. First harden yourself against all Weather, Man. Confider your Inclination; whether it be not that of a bad Stomach, or of a longing Woman. First study to conceal what you are; philosophise a little while by yourfelf. Fruit is produced thus. The Seed must first be buried in the Ground, lie hid there fome time, and grow up by degrees, that it may come to Perfection. But, if it produces the Ear before the Stalk hath its proper Joints, it is imperfect, and of the Garden of Adonis (e). Now you are a poor Plant of this Kind. You have bloffomed too foon: the Winter will kill you. See what Countrymen fay about Seeds of any Sort, when the warm Weather comes too early. They are in great Anxiety, for fear the Seeds should ⁽d) Which were the Characteristics of the Cynics.

⁽e) At the Feath of Adonis, there were carried about little Earthen Pots, filled with Mould, in which grew feveral Sorts of Herbs. These were called Gardens: and from thence the Gardens of Adonis came to be preverbially applied to Things unfruitful or fading; because those Herbs were only sowed so long before the Festival, as to sprout forth and be green at that Time, and then were presently east into the Water. See Forrer's Greenin Antiquities, Chap. 20. p. 363.

shoot out too luxuriantly; and then, one Frost taking them (f), shows how prejudicial their Forwardness was. Beware you too, Man. You have shot out luxuriantly; you have sprung forth towards a trifling Fame, before the proper Season. You feem to be fomebody, as a Fool may among Fools. You will be taken by the Frost: or rather, you are already frozen downwards, at the Root: you still blossom indeed a little at the Top, and therefore you think you are still alive and flourishing. Let us, at least, ripen naturally. Why do you lay us open? Why do you force us? We cannot yet bear the Air, Suffer the Root to grow; then the first, then the second, then the third Joint of the Stalk to fpring from it; and thus (g) Nature will force out the Fruit, whether I will or not. For who that is big with, and full of fuch Principles, doth not perceive too his own Qualifications, and exert his Efforts to correspondent Operations? Not even a Bull is ignorant of his own Qualifications, when any wild Beaft approaches the Herd, nor waits for any one to encourage him; nor a Dog, when he spies any Game. And, if I have the Qualifications of a good Man, shall I wait for you to qualify me for my own proper Operations? But believe me, I have them not yet. Why then would you wish me to be withered before my Time, as you are?

⁽f) Here is a strong Similitude to the Seed, in the Gospels, that sprung up quickly, and withered.

⁽g) This Paffage hath fome Difficulty in the Original; and, probably, may have been corrupted. The Translation hath given what feems to be the Senfe.

CHAPTER IX.

Concerning a Person who was grown immodest.

(a) §. 1. TT THEN you fee another in Power, fet against it, that you have the Advantage of not wanting Power. When you fee another rich, fee what you have instead of Riches: for, if you have nothing in their Stead, you are miserable. But, if you have the Advantage of not needing Riches, know, that you have fomething more than he hath, and of far greater Value. Another possesses a handfome Woman; you, the Happiness of not desiring a handsome Woman. Do you think these are little Matters? And what would those very Persons, who are rich, and powerful, and possess handsome Women, give, that they were able to despise Riches and Power, and those very Women whom they love, and whom they acquire! Do not you know of what Nature the Thirst of one in a Fever is? It hath no Resemblance to that of a Person in Health. He drinks, and is fatisfied. But the other, after being delighted a very little while, grows fick, turns the Water into Choler, throws it up, hath Pain in his Bowels, and becomes more violently thirfty. Of the fame Nature is it to have Riches, or Dominion, or enjoy a fine Woman, with Fondness of any one of these Things. Jealousy takes place; Fear of losing the beloved Object; indecent Discourses; indecent Designs; unbecoming Actions.

⁽a) They, who are defirous of taking Refuge in Heathenifin from the Strictness of the Christian Morality, will find no great Consolation in reading this Chapter of Epistetus.

§. 2. "And what, fay you, do I lose all the while?"-You were modest, Man, and are so no longer. Have you loft nothing? Instead of Chrysppus and Zeno, you read Ariffides (b) and Euenus (c). Have you lost nothing then? Instead of Socrates and Diogenes, you admire him who can corrupt and entice the most Women. You set out your Perfon, and would be handsome, when you are not. You love to appear in fine Clothes, to attract the Eyes of the Women; and, if you any-where meet with (d) a good Perfumer, you efteem yourfelf a happy Man. But formerly you did not fo much as think of any of these Things; but only where you might find a decent Discourse, a worthy Person, a noble Defign. For this Reason, you used to sleep like a Man; to appear in public like a Man; to wear a manly Drefs; to hold Discourses worthy of a Man. And after this, do you tell me, you have loft nothing? What then do Men lofe nothing but Money? Is not Modesty to be lost? Is not Decency to be loft? Or may he, who lofes thefe, fuffer no Damage? You indeed perhaps no longer think any thing of this Sort to be a Damage. But there was once a Time, when you accounted this to be the only Damage and Hurt; when you were anxioully afraid, left any one should shake your Regard from these Discourses and Actions. See, it is not shaken by another; but by yourfelf. Fight against yourfelf, recover yourfelf to Decency, to Modesty, to Freedom. If you had formerly been told any of these Things of me, that any one prevailed on me to commit Adultery, to wear fuch a Drefs as yours,

⁽b) An indecent Poet of Miletus.

⁽c) A Writer of amorous Verfes.

⁽d) The Translation follows Mr. Upton's Conjecture of Mupomois.

to be perfumed, would not you have gone and laid violent Hands on the Man, who thus abused me? And will you not now then help yourfelf? For how much easier is that Affiftance? You need not kill, or fetter, or affront, or go to Law with any one; but merely to talk with yourfelf, who will most readily be perfuaded by you, and with whom no one hath greater Credit than you. And, in the first place, condemn your Actions: but when you have condemned them, do not despair of yourself, nor be like those poorfpirited People, who when they have once given Way, abandon themselves intirely, and are carried along, as by a Torrent. Take Example from the wreftling Mafters. Hath the Boy fallen down? Get up again, they fay; wreftle again, till you have acquired Strength. Be you affected in the same Manner. For, be affured, that there is nothing more tractable than the Human Mind. You need but will, and it is done, it is fet right: as, on the contrary, you need but nod over the Work, and it is ruined. For both Ruin and Recovery are from within.

§. 3. "And, after all, what Good will this do me?"—

(e) What greater Good do you feek? From impudent, you

⁽e) Epiderus here afferts, that the only Benefit of Reformation is, being reformed; and that they, who look for any other, are incapable of being reformed, even by God himidft; and fo may go on, and be as bad as they pleafe. Suppose a Prince flould publish a Proclamation, that the only Advantage of Loyalty was being loyal; and, if any of his Subjects looked for any other, he might be a Rebel with Impunity: what Effect must this have, compared with the Declaration, Rev. xxii. 11, 12. He that is unjuft, et him be unjuft fill: and be that is filtly, let him be unjuft fill: and be that is filtly, let him be unjuft fill. It is the fifty fill: and be that is righteous, her him be righteous fill! And bebold, I cover quickly, and my Reward is with Me, to give to every Man, according as his Works fault be.

The Discourses of Book IV.

will become modeft; from indecent, decent; from diffolute, fober. If you feek any greater Things than thefe, go on as you do. It is no longer in the Power of any God to fave you.

412

CHAPTER X.

What Things we are to despise, and on what to place a distinguished Value.

§. 1. HE Doubts and Perplexities of all Men are concerning Externals. What they shall do? How it may be? What will be the Event? Whether this Thing may happen, or that? All this is the Talk of Persons engaged in Things independent on Choice. For who fays, How shall I do, not to affent to what is false? How, not to diffent from what is true? . If any one is of such a good Disposition, as to be anxious about these Things, I will remind him: Why are you anxious? It is in your own Be affured. Do not rush upon Assent before you have applied the natural Rule. Again, if (a) he be anxious, for fear his Defire should be ineffectual and disappointed, or his Aversion incurred, I will first kiss him, because, slighting what others are in a Flutter and terrified about, he takes Care of what is his own; where his very Being is: then I will fay to him; If you would not be difappointed of your Defires, or incur your Aversions, defire nothing that belongs to others; be averse to nothing not in your own Power; otherwise your Desire must necessarily be disappointed, and your Aversion incurred. Where is the Doubt here? Where the room for, How will it be? What will be the Event? And, Will this happen, or that? Now is not the Event independent on Choice?—"Yes."—And doth not the Essence of Good and Evil consist in what depends on Choice?—"Yes."—It is in your Power then, to treat every Event conformably to Nature? Can any one restrain you?—"No one."—Then do not say to me any more, How will it be? For, however it be, you will set it right, and the Event to you will be lucky.

⁽a) I read the Text, in this Place, as Wolfius appears by his Translation to have done,

§. 2. Pray what would Hercules have been, if he had faid, "What can be done to prevent a great Lion, or a great " Boar, or favage Men, from coming in my Way?" Why, what is that to you? If a great Boar should come in your Way, you will fight the greater Combat: if wicked Men, you will deliver the World from wicked Men.--" But then if I fhould die by this Means?"-You will die a good Man, in the Performance of a gallant Action. For fince, at all Events, one must die, one must necessarily be found doing fomething, either tilling, or digging, or trading, or ferving a Confulship, or fick of an Indigestion, or a Flux. At what Employment then would you have Death find you? For my Part I would have it be some humane, beneficent, public-spirited gallant Action. But if I cannot be found doing any fuch great Things, yet, at least, I would be doing what I am incapable of being reftrained from, what is given me to do, correcting myfelf, improving that Faculty which makes use of the Appearances of Things, to procure Tranquilling, quillity, and render to the feveral Relations of Life their Due; and, if I am so fortunate, advancing to the third Topic, a Security of Judging right. If Death overtakes me in fuch a Situation, it is enough for me, if I can stretch out my Hands to God, and fay, " The Opportunities which "Thou haft given me, of comprehending and following " [the Rules] of thy Administration, I have not neglected. " As far as in me lay, I have not dishonoured Thee, " how I have used my Perceptions; how, my Pre-concep-" tions. Have I at any time found fault with Thee? Have " I been discontented at Thy Dispensations; or wished them " otherwise. Have I transgressed the Relations of Life? I " thank Thee, that Thou hast brought me into Being. " am fatisfied with the Time that I have enjoyed the Things, " which Thou haft given me. Receive them back again, and " affign them to whatever Place Thou wilt; for they were (b) " all Thine, and Thou gavest them to me (c)."

414 The Discourses of Book IV.

§. 3. Is it not enough to make one's Exit in this State of Mind? And what Life is better, and more becoming than

⁽b) Thine they were, and Thou gavest them me. John xvii. 6.

⁽c) I with it were poffible to palliate the Oftentation of this Paffage, by applying it to the ideal perfect Character: but it is in a general Way, that Epiziens hath proposed such a dying Speech, as cannot, without shecking Arrogance, be uttered by any one born to die. Unmixt as it is with any Acknowlegement of Faults or Imperfections at prefent, or with any Sense of Guilt on Account of the past, it must give every sober Reader a very disadvantageous Opinion of some Principles of the Philosophy, on which it is founded, as contradictory to the Voice of Conference, and formed on absolute Ignorance, or Neglect, of the Condition and Circumstances of such a Creature as Man.

that of fuch a one? Or what Conclusion happier? But, in order to attain these Advantages, there are no inconfiderable Things, both to be taken and loft. You cannot wish both for a Consulship and these too, nor take Pains to get an Estate and these too, or be solicitous both about your Servants and yourfelf. But, (d) if you wish any thing absolutely, of what belongs to others, what is your own is loft. This is the Nature of the Affair. Nothing is to be had for nothing. And where is the Wonder? If you would be Conful, you must watch, run about, kiss Hands, be wearied down with waiting at the Doors of others, must say and do many flavish Things, fend Gifts to many, daily Presents to fome. And what is the Confequence [of Success]? Twelve Bundles of Rods (e); to fit three or four times on the Tribunal; to give the Circenfian Games, and Suppers (f) in Baskets to all the World: or let any one shew me what there is in it more than this. Will you then be at no Expence, no Pains to acquire Apathy, Tranquillity, to fleep found while you do fleep, to be thoroughly awake while you are awake, to fear nothing, to be anxious for nothing? But, if any thing belonging to you be loft, or idly wasted, while you are thus engaged, or another gets what you ought to have had, will you immediately begin fretting at what hath happened? Will you not compare the Exchange you have made? How much for how much? But you would have fuch great. Things for nothing, I suppose. And how can you? One ⁽d) See Enchiridion, c. xiii.

⁽c) The Enfigns of the Confular Office.

⁽f) These were distributed by the great Men in Rome to their Clients, as a Reward for their Attendance.

Bufiness doth not suit with another: you cannot bestow your Care both upon Externals and your own ruling Faculty (g). But, if you would have the former, let the latter alone; or you will fucceed in neither, while you are drawn different Ways, towards both. On the other hand, if you would have the latter, let the former alone.—" The Oil will be spilled, "the Furniture will be spoiled:"—but still I shall be free from Passion.—" There will be a Fire when I am not in the Way, and the Books will be destroyed:"—but still I shall treat the Appearances of Things conformably to Nature.—" But I shall have nothing to eat."—If I am so unlucky, dying is a safe Harbour. That is the Harbour for all, Death: that is the Refuge; and, for that Reason, there is nothing difficult in Life. You may go out of Doors when you please, and be troubled with Smoke no longer.

§. 4. Why then are you anxious? Why do you keep your-felf waking? Why do not you calculate where your Good and Evil lies: and fay, they are both in my own Power; neither can any deprive me of the one, or involve me, againft my Will, in the other. Why then do not I lay myself down and fnore? What is my own, is fafe. Let what belongs to others look to itself, who carries it off, how it is given away by Him, that hath the Disposal of it. Who am I, to will, that it should be so and so? For is the Option given to me? Hath any one made Me the Disposaler of it? What I have in my own Disposal is enough for me. I must make the boft I can of this. Other Things must be as the Master of them pleases.

⁽g) Ye cannot ferve God and Mammon. Matth. vi. 24.

§. 5. Doth any one, who hath these Things before his Eyes, lie awake, [like Achilles,] and shift from Side to Side? What would he have, or what doth he want? Patroclus, or Antilochus (g), or Menelaus? Why, did he ever think any one of his Friends immortal? Why, when had not he it before his Eyes, that the Morrow, or the next Day, himself, or that Friend, might die?-" Ay, very true, fays he: " but (b) I reckoned, that he would furvive me, and bring " up my Son."-Because you were a Fool, and reckoned upon (i) Uncertainties. Why then do not you blame yourfelf; but fit crying, like a Girl?-" But he used to (k) set " my Dinner before me." Because he was alive, Fool; but now he cannot. But Automedon will fet it before you; and, if he should die, you will find somebody else. if the Pipkin, in which your Meat used to be cooked, should happen to be broken; must you die with Hunger, because you have not your old Pipkin (1)? Do not you fend and buy a new one?

What

(g) Antilochus and Menelaus are not mentioned, or referred to, in the Passage of Homer, to which Epistetus alludes.

POPE.

Thou too, Patroclus, (thus his Heart he vents)

Hast spread the inviting Banquet in our Tents. (/) This is a wretched Idea of Friendship; but a necessary Consequence of the Stoic Syftem. What a fine Contrast to this gloomy Confolation are the noble Sentiments of an Apoffle! Value your deceased Friend, fays Epicletus, as a broken Pipkin; forget him, as a Thing worthless, lost, and destroyed. St. Paul, on the contrary, comforts the IIhh

⁽b) Afnλα ωΒ, perhaps, should be αδηλα δηλα ωΒ.

I hop'd Patroclus might furvive, to rear My tender Orphan, with a Parent's Care.

What greater Evil (fays he) could afflict my Breast?

Is this your Evil then? And, inflead of removing it, do you accuse your Mother, that she did not foretell it to you, that you might have spent your whole Life in grieving from that Time forward?

§. 6. Do not you think now, that Homer composed all this on Purpose to shew us, that the noblest, the strongest, the richest, the handsomest of Men, may, nevertheles, be the most unfortunate and wretched, if they have not the Principles they ought to have?

CHAPTER XI.

Of Purity and Cleanliness.

§. 1. SOME doubt whether Sociableness be comprehended in the Nature of Man: and yet these very Persons do not seem to me to doubt, but that Purity is by all means comprehended in it; and that by this, if by any thing, it is diffinguished from brute Animals. When therefore we see any Animal cleaning itself, we are apt to cry, with Wonder, It is like a human Creature. On the contrary, if an Animal is accused so Dirtiness, we are presently apt to say, by way of Excuse, that it is not a human Creature. Such Excellence do we suppose to be in Man, which we first received from mourning Survivors; bidding them, not forew, as these volo have no Hape: but remember, that the Death of good Persons is only a Sleep; from which they shall soon arise to a happy Immortality.

the Gods. For, as they are by Nature pure and uncorrupt, in proportion as Men approach to them by Reafon, they are tenacious of Purity and Incorruption. But, fince it is impracticable that their Effence, composed of such Materials, should be absolutely pure, it is the Office of Reason to endeavour to render it as pure as possible.

- §. 2. The first and highest Purity, or Impurity, then, is that which is formed in the Soul. But you will not find the Impurity of the Soul and Body to be alike. For what else [of Impurity] can you find in the Soul, than that which renders it filthy with regard to its Operations? Now the Operations of the Soul are its Pursuits and Avoidances, its Desires, Aversions, Preparations, Intentions, Assents. What then is that which renders it defiled and impure in these Operations? Nothing else than its perverse Judgments. So that the Impurity of the Soul consists in wicked Principles; and its Purisication in the forming right Principles: and that is pure which hath right Principles; for that alone is unmixed and undefiled in its Operations.
- §. 3. Now we should, as far as possible, endeavour after fomething like this in the Body too. It is impossible but, in such a Composition as Man, there must be a Defluxion of Rheum. For this Reason, Nature hath made Hands, and the Nostrils themselves as Channels to let out the Moisture. If any one therefore snuffs it up again, I say, that he performs not the Operation of a Man. It was impossible, but that the Feet must be bemired and solded from what they pass through. Therefore Nature hath prepared Water and Hands.

Hands. It was impossible, but that some Filth must cleave to the Teeth from Eating. Therefore, she fays, wash your Teeth. Why? That you may be a Man, and not a wild Beaft, or a Swine. It was impossible, but, from Perspiration, and the Pressure of the Clothes, something dirty, and necessary to be cleaned, should remain upon the Body. For this, there is Water, Oil, Hands, Towels, Brushes, Sope, and other necessary Apparatus, for its Purification. No: a Smith indeed will get the Ruft off his Iron, and have proper Instruments for that Purpose: and you yourself will have your Plates washed before you eat; unless you are quite dirty and flovenly: but you will not wash nor purify your Body.---"Why should I?" (fay you.)-I tell you again, in the first place, that you may be like a Man; and, in the next, that you may not offend those with whom you converse.  (a) Without being fensible of it, you do fomething like this. Do you think you deserve to stink? Be it so. But do those deferve [to fuffer by] it who fit near you? Who are placed at Table with you? Who falute you? Either go into a Defert, as you deferve, or live folitary at Home, and fmell yourfelf: for it is fit you should enjoy your Nastiness alone. But, to what Sort of Character doth it belong, to live in a City, and behave so carclessly and inconsiderately? If Nature had trufted even a Horfe to your Care, would you have overlooked and neglected him? Now confider your Body as committed to you, instead of a Horse. Wash (b) it, rub it, take care that it may not be any one's Aversion, nor disgust any one. Who is not more difgusted at a stinking, unwholesomelooking Sloven, than at a Person who hath been rolled in Filth? The Stench of the one is adventitious from without; but that which arises from Want of Care, is a Kind of inward Putrefaction. "But Socrates bathed but feldom." --- But his Person looked clean, and was so agreeable and pleasing, that the most beautiful and noble Youths were fond of him, and defired rather to fit by him, than by those who had the finest Persons. He might have omitted both Bathing and Washing, if he had pleased; and yet Bathing, though seldom, had its Effect .- " But Ariftophanes calls him, one of the fqualid slip-shod Philosophers." --- Why, so he says too, that he walked in the Air, and stole Clothes from the Palæstra. Befides, all who have written of Socrates, affirm quite the contrary; that he was not only agreeable in his Conversation, but in his Person too. And, again, they write the same of Diogenes. For we ought not to fright the World from Philofophy, by the Appearance of our Person; but to show ourfelves chearful and easy, by the Care of our Persons (c), as well as by other Marks. " See, all of you, that I have " nothing; that I want nothing. Without House, without ⁽b) Here, probably, should be added — if you do not chuse warm there, with cold. These Words in the Greek are transferred to a Place, where they are absolutely unintelligible. They were, probably, at first, omitted by chance; then supplied at the Bottom of the Page; and then transferibed, as if that had been their proper Place.

⁽a) Something here feems to be lost. Or, perhaps, the Words, without being fensible of it, you do something like this, ought to be inserted after, neglected him.

⁽c) In Times of Mourning or Danger, the Ancients expressed their Sense of their Situation by neglecting their Persons.

"City, and an Exile, (if that happens to be the Case (d),) " and without a Home, I live more eafily and prosperously " than the Noble and Rich. Look upon my Person too, that " it is not injured by coarse Fare." -- But, if any one should tell me this, with the Habit and the Vifage of a condemned Criminal, what God should perfuade me to come near Philofophy, while (e) it renders Men fuch Figures? Heaven forbid! I would not do it, even if I was fure to become a wife Man for my Pains. I declare, for my own Part, I would rather that a young Man, on his first Inclination to Philosophy, should come to me finically dressed, than with his Hair spoiled and dirty. For there appears in him some Idea of Beauty, and Defire of Decency: and where he imagines it to be, there he applies his Endeavours. One hath nothing more to do, but to point it out to him, and fay, " You " feek Beauty, young Man; and you do well. Be affured "then, that it fprings from the rational Part of you. Seek " it there, where the Pursuits and Avoidances, the Defires " and Aversions, are concerned. Herein confifts your Ex-" cellence: but the paultry Body is by Nature Clay. Why " do you trouble yourfelf, to no Purpose, about it? You " will be convinced by Time, if not otherwise, that it is " nothing." But, if he should come to me bemired, dirty, with Whifkers down to his Knees, what can I fay to him? By what Similitude allure him? For what hath he studied, which hath any Resemblance to Beauty, that I may transfer ⁽d) As it was the Case of Diogenes.

⁽e) For $\omega_{\nabla}\varepsilon$, perhaps, $\varepsilon_{\nabla}\varepsilon$ may be the true Reading; and it is so aranslated.

his Attention, and fay, that Beauty is not there, but here? Would you have me tell him, that Beauty doth not confift in Filth, but in Reafon? For hath he any Defire of Beauty? Hath he any Appearance of it? Go, and argue with a Hog, not to roll in the Mire.

§. 4. It was in the Quality of a young Man that loved Beauty, that Polemo (f) was touched by the Discourses of Xenocrates. For he entered with some Incentives to the Study of Beauty, though he fought it in the wrong Place. And indeed Nature bath not made the very Brutes dirty, which live with Man. Doth a Horse wallow in the Mire? Or a good Dog? But Swine, and filthy Geese, and Worms, and Spiders, which are banished to the greatest Distance from human Society. Will you then, who are a Man, chuse not to be even one of the Animals, that are converfant with Man; but rather a Worm, or a Spider? Will you not bathe sometimes, be it in whatever Manner you please? Will you never use Water to wash yourself? Will you not come clean, that they who converfe with you may have some Pleasure in you? But will you accompany us, a mere Lump of Naffiness, even to the Temples; where it is not lawful for any one fo much as to fpit, or blow his Nofe?

§. 5. What then, would any body have you drefs yourfelf out to the utmost? By no means; except in those Things where our Nature requires it; in Reason, Principles, Actions: but, in our Persons, only as far as Neatness, as far as not to give Offence. But if you hear, that it is not right to wear Purple, you muft go, I fuppofe, and roll your Gloke in the Mud, or tear it.—" But where should I have a fine Cloke?"—You have Water, Man; wash it.—" What an amiable (g) " Youth is here? How worthy this old Man, to love, and be " loved!"—A fit Person to be trusted with the Instruction of our Sons and Daughters, and attended by young People, as Occasion may require,—to read them Lectures on a Dunghil! Every Deviation proceeds from something human: but this approaches very nearly towards being not human.

⁽f) See p. 225. Note (c).

424 The Discourses of Book IV.

CHAPTER XII.

Of Attention.

§. I. WHEN you let go your Attention for a little while, do not fancy you may recover it when-ever you please: but remember this, That, by means of the Fault of To-day, your Affairs must necessarily be in a worse Condition for the future. First, what is the saddest Thing of all, a Habit arises of not attending; and then a Habit of deferring the Attention, and always driving (a) off from time to time, and procrastinating a prosperous Life, a Propriety of Behaviour, and the Thinking and Assing conformably to Nature. Now, if the Procrastination of any thing is advantageous, the absolute Omission of it is still more advantageous: but,

⁽g) The Youth, probably, means the Scholar, who neglects Neat-nefs; and the old Man, the Tutor, that gives him no Precept or Example of it.

⁽a) Eiroba, perhaps, fhould be wootai.

if it be not advantageous, why do not you preferve a conftant Attention?-" I would play To-day."-What then? Ought you not to do it, with proper Attention to yourself?---"I would fing."-Well: and what forbids but that you may fing, with Attention to yourfelf? For there is no Part of Life exempted, to which Attention doth not extend. For will you do it the worse by attending, and the better by not attending? What elfe in Life is best performed by inattentive People? Doth a Smith forge the better by not attending? Doth a Pilot steer the safer by not attending? Or is any other, even of the minutest Operations, performed the better by Inattention? Do not you perceive, that, when you have let your Mind loofe, it is no longer in your Power to call it back, either to Propriety, or Modesty, or Moderation? But you do every thing as it happens: you follow your Inclinations.

§. 2. To what then am I to attend?

Why, in the first place, to those universal Maxims, which you must always have at hand; and not sleep, or get up, or drink, or eat, or converse without them: that no one is the Master of another's Choice; and it is in Choice alone that Good and Evil confist. No one therefore is the Master either to procure me any Good, or to involve me in any Evil: but I alone have the Disposal of myself, with regard to these Things. Since these then are secured to me, what need have I to be troubled about Externals? What Tyrant is formidable? What Distemper? What Poverty? What Offence?—" I have not pleased such a one."—Is he my Concern then? Is he my Conscience?—" No."—Why do I trouble myself any further about him then ?--- " But he " is thought to be of fome Confequence." -- Let him look to that, and they who think him fo. But I have One, whom I must please, to whom I must submit, whom I must obey; God, and those (b) who are next Him. He hath entrusted me with myfelf, and made my Choice subject to myfelf alone, having given me Rules for the right Use of it. If I follow the proper Rules in Syllogisms, in convertible Propofitions, I do not regard, nor care for any one, who fays any thing contrary to them. Why then am I vext at being cenfured in Matters of greater Confequence? What is the Reason of this Perturbation? Nothing else, but that in this Instance I want Exercise. For every Science despites Ignorance, and the Ignorant; and not only the Sciences, but even the Arts. Take any Shoemaker, take any Smith you will, and he laughs at the rest of the World, with regard to his own Bufiness.

§. 3. In the first place then, these are the Maxims we must have ready, and do nothing without them; but direct the Soul to this Mark, to pursue nothing external, nothing that belongs to others, but as He, who hath the Power, hath appointed: Things dependent on Choice are to be pursued always; and the rest, as it is permitted. Besides this, we must remember, who we are, and what Name we bear, and endeavour to direct the several Offices of Life to the rightful

⁽b) The tutelar Genius, and Fortune. Of the former, fee B. I. ch. 14. §. 2. Of both, fee B. IV. ch. 4. §. 4. By changing zz tross into zzz tros, the Translation would be; But, next to Him, He bath introfled me with myself.

Demands of its feveral Relations: what is the proper Time for Singing, what for Play, in what Company: what will be the Confequence of our Performance: whether our Companions will defpife us, or we ourfelves: when to employ Raillery, and whom to ridicule: upon what Occasions to comply, and with whom; and then, in complying, how to preserve our own Character.

§, 4. Where-ever you deviate from any of these Rules, the Damage is immediate; not from any thing external, but from the very Action itself .-- "What then, is it possible, " by these Means, to be faultless?" Impracticable: but this is possible, to use a constant Endeavour to be faultless. For we shall have Cause to be satisfied, if, by never remitting this Attention, we shall be exempt at least from a few Faults. But now, when you fay, I will begin to attend Tomorrow; be affured, it is the fame Thing as if you fay, "I " will be shameless, impertinent, base, To-day: it shall be " in the Power of others to grieve me: I will be passionate, " I will be envious To-day." See to how many Evils you give yourfelf up --- " But all will be well To-morrow."---How much better To-day? If it be for your Interest Tomorrow, much more To-day, that it may be in your Power To-morrow too, and that you may not defer it again to the third Day.

CHAPTER XIII.

Concerning Such as readily discover their own Affairs.

- §. 1. WHEN any one appears to us to discourse frankly of his own Affairs, we too are some Way induced to discover our Secrets to him; and we suppose this to be acting with Frankness. ' First, because it seems unfair, that, when we have heard the Affairs of our Neighbour, we should not, in return, communicate ours to him; and, befides, we think, that we shall not appear of a frank Character in concealing what belongs to ourselves. Indeed it is often faid, " I have told you all my Affairs; and will you " tell me none of yours? Where do People act thus?" Lastly, it is supposed, that we may fafely trust him who hath already trusted us: for we imagine, that he will never discover our Affairs, for fear we, in our Turn, should discover his. It is thus that the Inconfiderate are caught by the Soldiers at Rome. A Soldier fits by you, in a common Drefs, and begins to speak ill of Cafar. Then you, as if you had received a Pledge of his Fidelity, by his first beginning the Abuse, say likewise what you think; and so you are led away in Chains to Execution.
- §. 2. Something like this is the Case with us in general. But when one hath safely intrusted his Secrets to me, shall I, in Imitation of him, trust mine to any one who comes in my Way? The Case is different. I indeed hold my Tongue, (supposing me to be of such a Disposition) but he goes, and discovers them to every body: and then, when I come to find it out, if I happen to be like him, from a Defire of Revenge, I difcover his; and afperfe, and am afperfed. But, if I remember, that one Man doth not hurt another, but that every one is hurt and profited by his own Actions, I indeed keep to this, not to do any thing like him: yet, by my own talkative Folly, I fuffer what I do fuffer.

§. 3. " Ay: but it is unfair, when you have heard the " Secrets of your Neighbour, not to communicate any thing " to him, in return." --- Why, did I ask you to do it, Sir? Did you tell me your Affairs, upon Condition that I should tell you mine, in return? If you are a Blab, and believe all you meet to be Friends, would you have me too become like you? But, what if the Cafe be this: that you did right in trusting your Affairs to me, but it is not right that I should trust you? Would you have me run headlong, and fall? This is just as if I had a found Barrel, and you a leaky one: and you should come and deposite your Wine with me to put it into my Barrel; and then should take it ill, that, in my Turn, I did not trust you with my Wine. No. You have a leaky Barrel. How then are we any longer upon equal Terms? You have deposited your Affairs with an honest Man, and a Man of Honour; one who efteems his own Actions alone, and nothing external, to be either hurtful or profitable. Would you have me deposite mine with you: a Man who have dishonoured your own Faculty of Choice, and who would get a paultry Sum, or a Polt of Power or Preferment at Court, even if, for the Sake of it, you were to kill your own Children, like Medea? Where is the Equality of this? But show me, that you are faithful; a Man a Man of Honour, steady; show me, that you have friendly Principles; show me, that your Vessel is not leaky; and you shall see, that I will not stay till you have trusted your. Affairs to me; but I will come and intreat you to hear an Account of mine. For who would not make use of a good Veffel? Who despifes a benevolent and friendly Adviser? Who will not gladly receive one to share the Burden, as it were, of his Difficulties; and, by fharing, to make it lighter? -" Well: but I trust you, and you do not trust me." In the first place, you do not really trust me; but you are a Blab, and therefore can keep nothing in. For, if the former be the Case, trust only me. But now, whomever you fee at leifure, you fit down by him, and fay, " My dear " Friend, there is not a Man in the World that wishes me " better, or hath more Kindness for me, than you; I intreat " you to hear my Affairs." And this you do to those, with whom you have not the least Acquaintance. But, if you do [really] trust me, it is plainly as [thinking me] a Man of Fidelity and Honour; and not because I have told you my Affairs. Let me alone then, till I too am of this Opinion [with regard to You.]. Show me, that, if a Person hath told his Affairs to any one, it is a Proof of his being a Man of Fidelity and Honour. For, if this was the Case, I would go about and tell my Affairs to the whole World; if, upon that Account, I should become a Man of Fidelity and Honour. But that is no fuch Matter; but requires a Person to have no ordinary Principles.

§. 4. If then you fee any one taking Pains for Things that belong to others, and fubjecting his Choice to them, be affured, affured, that this Man hath a thousand Things to compell and restrain him. He hath no Need of burning Pitch, or the torturing Wheel, to make him tell what he knows; but the Nod of a Girl, for Instance, will shake his Purpose; the Good-will of a Courtier, the Desire of a public Post, of an Inheritance; ten Thousand other Things of that Sort. It must therefore be remembered in general, that secret Discourses require Fidelity, and a certain Sort of Principles. And where, at this Time, are these easily to be found? Pray let any one show me a Person of such a Disposition as to say, I trouble myself only with those Things which are my own, incapable of Restraint, by Nature free. This I efteem the Essence of Good. Let the rest be as it may happen. It makes no Difference to me.

END of the Discourses.

THE

ENCHIRIDION,

OR

MANUAL,

O F

EPICTETUS.

THE

ENCHIRIDION

T.

F Things, fome are in our Power, and othersnot. In our Power are Opinion, Pursuit, Defire, Aversion, and, in one Word, whatever are our own Actions. Not in our Power, are Body, Property, Reputation, Command, and, in one Word, whatever are not our own Actions.

Now, the Things in our Power are, by Nature, free, unreftrained, unhindered: but those not in our Power, weak, flavish, restrained, belonging to others. Remember then, that, if you suppose Things by Nature slavish, to be free; and what belongs to others, your own; you will be hindered; you will lament; you will be diffurbed; you will find fault both with Gods and Men. But, if you suppose, that only to be your own, which is your own; and what belongs to others, fuch as it really is; no one will ever compell you; no one will restrain you: you will find fault with no one; you will accuse no one; you will do no one Thing Kkk 2 againft.

436 The Enchiridion.

against your Will: no one will hurt you: you will not have an Enemy; for you will fusfer no Harm.

Aiming therefore at fuch great Things, remember, that you must not allow yourself to be carried, even with a slight Tendency, towards the Attainment of the others (a): but that you must entirely quit some of them, and for the present postpone the rest. But, if you would both have these, and Conmand, and Riches, at once, perhaps you will not gain so much as the latter; because you aim at the former too: but you will absolutely fail of the former; by which alone Happiness and Freedom are procured.

Study, therefore, to be able to fay to every harsh Appearance, "You are but an Appearance, and not absolutely the "Thing you appear to be." And then examine it by those Rules which you have: and first, and chiesty, by this: Whether it concerns the Things which are in our own Power, or those which are not; and, if it concerns any thing not in our Power, be prepared to say, that it is nothing to you.

II.

REMEMBER that Defire promifes the Attainment of that of which you are defirous; and Averfion promifes the Avoiding of that to which you are averfe: that he who fails of the Object of his Defire, is disappointed: and he who incurs the Object of his Averfion, wretched. If then, you confine your Averfion to those Objects only, which are contrary to that natural Use of your Faculties, which you have in your own Power, you will never incur any thing to which you are averfe. But if you are averfe to Sicknes, or Death, or Poverty, you will be wretched. Remove Aversion, then, from all Things that are not in our Power, and transfer it to Things contrary to the Nature of what is in our Power. But, for the present, totally suppress Desire: for, if you desire any of the Things not in our own Power, you must necessarily be disappointed; and of those which are, and which it would be laudable to desire, nothing is yet in your Possession. (b) Use only [the requisite Acts] of Pursuit and Avoidance; and even these lightly, and with Gentlenes, and Reservation.

 ⁽a) The Translation follows Mr. Upton's Conjecture, of αλλων for αντων.

III.

With regard to whatever Objects either delight the Mind, or contribute to Ufe, or are loved with fond Affection, remember to tell yourself, of what Nature they are, beginning from the most trifling Things. If you are fond of an Earthen Cup, that it is an Earthen Cup of which you are fond: for thus, if it is broken, you will not be diffurbed. If you kifs your Child, or your Wife, that you kifs a Being fubject to the Accidents of Humanity; and thus you will not be diffurbed, if either of them dies.

⁽b) The Senfe is, that he, who is only beginning to philosophise, hath yet nothing right within him to defire, or set his Heart upon; therefore, till he hath, he must not set his Heart upon any thing. But in the mean time, he must make use of the Purshits and Avoidances; i. e. perform the common Actions of Life: but these outward Movements must be cautious and gentle; and the inward Movements of Defire be quite restrained.

WHEN you are going about any Action, remind yourfelf of what Nature the Action is. If you are going to bathe, represent to yourself the Things, which usually happen in the Bath: fome Perfons dashing the Water; fome pushing and crowding; others giving abusive Language; and others stealing [the Clothes]. And thus you will more fafely go about this Action, if you fay to yourfelf, " I will now " go bathe, and preferve my own Mind in a State con-" formable to Nature." And in the same manner with regard to every other Action. For thus, if any Impediment arises in Bathing, you will have it ready to say, " It " was not only to bathe that I defired, but to preferve my " Mind in a State conformable to Nature; and I shall not: " preserve it so, if I am out of Humour at Things that " happen."

V.

MEN are disturbed, not by Things, but by the Principles: and Notions, which they form concerning Things. Death, for Inftance, is not terrible, else it would have appeared fo to Socrates. But the Terror consists in our Notion of Death, that it is terrible. When therefore we are hindered, or diffurbed, or grieved, let us never impute it to others, but to ourselves; that is, to our own Principles. It is the Action of an uninftructed Person to lay the Fault of his own bad Condition upon others; of one entering upon Inftruction, to lay the Fault on himfelf; and of one perfectly instructed, neither on others, nor on himself.

VI.

Be not elated on any Excellence not your own. If a Horse should be elated, and say, "I am handsome," it would be supportable. But when you are elated, and say, "I have a handsome Horse," know, that you are elated on what is, in fact, only the Good of the Horse. (c) What then is your own? The Use of the Appearances of Things. So that when you behave conformably to Nature, in the Use of these Appearances, you will be elated with Reason; for you will be elated on some Good of your own.

VII.

As in a Voyage, when the Ship is at Anchor, if you go on Shore, to get Water, you may amufe yourfelf with picking up a Shell-fish, or an Onion, in your Way; but your Thoughts ought to be bent towards the Ship, and perpetually attentive, left the Captain should call; and then you must leave all these Things, that you may not be thrown into the Vessel, bound Neck and Heels, like a Sheep. Thus likewise in Life, if, instead of an Onion, or a Shell-sish, such a Thing as a Wife or a Child be granted you, there is no Objection: but if the Captain calls, run to the Ship, leave all these Things, regard none of them. But, if you are old, never go far from the Ship: lest, when you are called, you should be unable to come in time.

⁽c) 'The Translation follows Mr. Upton's Correction of the Text in this Chapter.

440 The Enchiridion.

VIII.

REQUIRE not Things to happen as you wish; but wish them to happen as they do happen; and you will go on well.

IX.

Sickness is an Impediment to the Body, but not to the Faculty of Choice, unless itfelf pleases. Lameness is an Impediment to the Leg, but not to the Faculty of Choice: and fay this to yourself with regard to every thing that happens. For you will find it to be an Impediment to something else; but not to yourself.

X.

Upon every Accident, remember to turn towards yourfelf, and enquire, what Powers you have for making a proper Use of it. If you see a handsome Person, you will find Continence a Power against this: if Pain be presented to you, you will find Fortitude: if Ill-Language, you will find Patience. And thus habituated, the Appearances of Things will not hurry you away along with them.

XI.

NEVER fay of any thing, "I have loft it;" but, "I have "reftored it." Is your Child dead? It is reftored. Is your Wife dead? She is reftored. Is your Effate taken away? Well: and is not that likewife reftored? "But he who took it away is a bad Man." What is it to you, by whose Hands He, who gave it, hath demanded it back again? While He gives you to possess it, take care of it; but as of something not your own, as Passengers do of an Inn.

XII.

XII.

IF you would improve, lay afide fuch Reasonings as these. "If I neglect my Affairs, I shall not have a Maintenance: if "I do not correct my Servant, he will be good for nothing." For it is better to die with Hunger, exempt from Grief and Fear, than to live in Affluence with Perturbation: and it is better your Servant should be bad, than you unhappy.

Begin therefore from little Things. Is a little Oil spilt? A little Wine stolen? Say to yourself, "This is the Purch chafe paid for Apathy, for Tranquillity; and nothing is to be had for nothing." And when you call your Servant, consider, it is possible he may not come at your Call; or, if he doth, that he may not do what you would have him do. But he is by no means of such Importance (d), that it should be in his Power to give you any Disturbance.

XIII.

(e) If you would improve, be content to be thought foolish and stupid with regard to Externals. Do not wish to be thought to know any thing; and though you should appear to be somebody to others, distrust yourself. For, be affured, it is not easy at once to preserve your Faculty of Choice in a State conformable to Nature, and [to secure] Externals: but while you are careful about the one, you must of Necessity neglect the other.

⁽d) Thus fome MSS. Changing in others xxxws into xxxws, the Translation will be —It is not fo well with Him, and ill with You.

⁽e) There is a great Likeness to Christian Phrases and Doctrines in this Chapter.

XIV.

Ir you wish your Children, and your Wise, and your Friends, to live for ever, you are stupid: for you wish Things to be in your Power, which are not so; and, what belongs to others, to be your own. So likewise, if you wish your Servant to be without Fault, you are a Fool; for you wish Vice not to be Vice (f), but something else. But, if you wish to have your Desires undisappointed, this is in your own Power. Exercise, therefore, what is in your Power. He is the Master of every other Person, who is able to confer, or remove, whatever that Person wishes either to have, or to avoid. Whoever then would be free, let him wish nothing, let him decline nothing, which depends on others; else he must necessarily be a Slave.

XV.

REMEMBER that you must behave [in Life] as at an Entertainment (g). Is any thing brought round to you? Put out your Hand, and take your Share, with Moderation. Doth it pass by you? Do not stop it. Is it not yet come? Do not fretch forth your Desire towards it, but wait till it reaches you. Thus [do] with regard to Children, to a Wise, to public Poss, to Riches: and you will be some time or other a worthy Partner of the Feass of the Gods. And if you do not so much as take the Things which are set before you, but are able even to despise them, then you will not only be a Partner of the Feass of the Gods, but of their Empire also.

⁽f) i. e. dependent on Persons own Choice.

⁽g) An Allusion to the Custom, in the antient Entertainments, of carrying round the Dishes to each of the Guess. Upton.

For, by thus doing, Diogenes and Heraclitus (b), and others like them, deservedly became, and were called, divine.

XVI.

When you see any one weeping for Grief, either that his Son is gone abroad, or dead, or that he hath suffered in his Affairs; take heed, that the Appearance may not hurry you away with it. But immediately make the Distinction within your own Mind; and have it ready to say, "It is not the "Accident [itself] that distresses this Person, for it doth "not distress another Man; but the Judgment, which he "forms concerning it." As far as Words go, however, do not distain to condescend to him; and even, if it should so happen, to groan with him. Take heed, however, not to groan inwardly too.

XVII.

REMEMBER that you are an Actor in a Drama, of fuch a Kind as the Author pleafes to make it. If fhort, of a fhort one; if long, of a long one. If it be his Pleafure you should act a poor Man, a Cripple, a Governor, or a private Person, fee that you act it naturally. For this is your Busses, to act well the Character assigned you: to chuse it, is another's.

XVIII.

WHEN a Raven happens to croak unluckily, let not the Appearance hurry you away with it: but immediately make the Diffinction to yourfelf; and fay, "None of thefe Things "is portended to me; but either to my paultry Body, or ⁽b) For Heraclitus, I suspect, should be read Hercules.

444 The ENCHIRIDION.

"Property, or Reputation, or Children, or Wife. But to meal Portents are lucky, if I will. For which-ever of these Things happens, it is in my Power to derive Advantage from it."

XIX.

You may be unconquerable, if you enter into no Combat, in which it is not in your own Power to conquer. When, therefore, you fee any one eminent in Honours, or Power, or in high Efteem on any other Account, take heed not to be hurried away with the Appearance, and to pronounce him happy: for, if the Effence of Good confifts in Things in our own Power, there will be no room for Envy, or Emulation. But, for your Part, do not wish to be a General, or a Senator, or a Conful, but [to be] free: and the only Way to this, is, a Contempt of Things not in our own Power.

XX.

REMEMBER, that not he who gives Ill-Language, or a Blow, affronts; but the Principle, which represents these Things as affronting. When, therefore, any one provokes you, be affured, that it is your own Opinion which provokes you. Try, therefore, in the first place, not to be hurried away with the Appearance. For, if you once gain Time and Respite, you will more easily command yourself.

XXI.

LET Death, and Exile, and all other Things which appear terrible, be daily before your Eyes; but chiefly Death: and you will never entertain any abject Thought, nor too eagerly covet any thing.

XXII.

XXII.

Is you have an earnest Desire of attaining to Philosophy, prepare yourself from the very first, to be laughed at, to be necred by the Multitude, to hear them say, "He is returned "to us a Philosopher all at once;" and, "Whence this "supercilious Look?" Now, for your Part, do not have a supercilious Look indeed; but keep steadily to those Things which appear best to you, as one appointed by God to this Station. For remember, that, if you adhere to the same Point, those very Persons who at first ridiculed, will afterwards admire you. But, if you are conquered by them, you will incur a double Ridicule.

XXIII.

If you ever happen to turn your Attention to Externals, fo as to wish to please any one, be assured, that you have ruined your Scheme of Life (i). Be contented then, in every thing, with being a Philosopher: and, if you wish to be thought so likewise by any one, appear so to yourself, and it will suffice you.

XXIV.

LET not fuch Confiderations as these distress you. "I a "fall live in Dishonour; and be no-body any-where." For, if Dishonour is an Evil, you can no more be involved in any Evil by the Means of another, than be engaged in any thing base. Is it any Business of yours then, to get Power, or to be admitted to an Entertainment? By no means. How then, after all, is this a Dishonour? And how is it true,

⁽i) If I yet pleafed Men, I flould not be the Servant of Chrift. Gal. i. to that

446 The ENCHIRIDION.

that you will be no-body any-where: when you ought to be fomebody in those Things only, which are in your own Power, in which you may be of the greatest Confequence? "But my Friends will be unaffifted."-What do you mean by unaffifted? They will not have Money from you: nor will you make them Roman Citizens. Who told you then, that these are among the Things in our own Power; and not the Affair of others? And who can give to another the Things, which he hath not himfelf? "Well: but get "them then, that we too may have a Share." If I can get them with the Preservation of my own Honour, and Fidelity, and Greatness of Mind, show me the Way, and I will get them: but, if you require me to lose my own proper Good, that you may gain what is no Good, confider how unequitable and foolish you are. Besides: which would you rather have, a Sum of Money; or a Friend of Fidelity and Honour? Rather affift me then to gain this Character, than require me to do those Things by which I may lose it. Well: but my Country, fay you, as far as depends upon me, will be unaffifted. Here again, what Affiftance is this you mean? " It will not have Porticos, nor Baths, of your providing." And what fignifies that? Why, neither doth a Smith provide it with Shoes, or a Shoemaker with Arms. It is enough, if every one fully performs his own proper Bufiness. And were you to supply it with another Citizen of Honour and Fidelity, would not (k) he be of Use to it? Yes. Therefore neither are you yourfelf useless to it. " What Place

⁽k) I have followed the Conjecture of a Friend, who thinks ωφελεις should be ωφελεις, to preferve an Opposition between the Person fignished by it, and the συ συτος in the next Sentence.

[&]quot; then.

"then, fay you, shall I hold in the State?" Whatever you can hold with the Preservation of your Fidelity and Honour-But if, by desiring to be useful to that, you lose these, of what Use can you be to your Country, when you are become faithless, and void of Shame?

XXV.

Is any one preferred before you at an Entertainment, or in a Compliment, or in being admitted to a Confultation? If these Things are good, you ought to rejoice, that he hath got them: and, if they are evil, do not be grieved, that you have not got them. And remember, that you cannot, without using the same Means [which others do] to acquire Things not in our own Power, expect to be thought worthy of an equal Share of them. For how can he, who doth not frequent the Door of any [great] Man, doth not attend him, doth not praise him, have an equal Share with him who doth? You are unjust then, and unsatiable, if you are unwilling to pay the Price for which these Things are fold, and would have them for nothing. For how much are Lettuces fold? A Half-peny, for Instance. If another then, paying a Half-peny, takes the Lettuces, and you, not paying it, go without them, do not imagine, that he hath gained any Advantage over you. For as he hath the Lettuces, fo you have the Half-peny, which you did not give. So, in the present Case, you have not been invited to such a Person's Entertainment; because you have not paid him the Price for which a Supper is fold. It is fold for Praife: it is fold for Attendance. Give him then the Value, if it be for your Advantage. But, if you would, at the fame time, not pay the

448 The ENCHIRIDION.

the one, and yet receive the other, you are infatiable, and a Blockhead. Have you nothing then, inftead of the Supper? Yes indeed you have: the not praifing him, whom you do not like to praife; the not bearing with his Behaviour at coming in (1).

XXVI.

The Will of Nature may be learned from those Things, in which we do not differ from each other. As, when our Neighbour's Boy hath broken a Cup, or the like, we are prefently ready to say, "These are Thing that will happen." Be affured then, that, when your own Cup likewise is broken, you ought to be affected just as when another's Cup was broken. Transfer this, in like manner, to greater Things. Is the Child or Wise of another dead? There is no one who would not say, "This is a human Accident." But, if any one's (m) own Child happens to die, it is presently, "Alas! how wretched "am I!" But it should be remembered, how we are affected in hearing the same Thing concerning others.

XXVII.

As a Mark (n) is not fet up for the Sake of missing the Aim, so neither doth the Nature of Evil exist in the World.

XXVIII.

⁽¹⁾ Or, according to the Reading in Simplicius—the Attendants in his Antichamber.

⁽m) Natural Affection prompts us to grieve for a Wife or a Child, and to fympathize with the Griefs of others: whence Chriftianity teaches us to accept with them about accept; yet forbidding us, in any Cafe, to forrow, as without Hope. Stoicism carries Truth into Abfurdity; while Chriftian Philosophy makes all Truths coincide, uniting Fortitude with Tendernels and Compatition.

⁽¹¹⁾ Happiness, the Effect of Virtue, is the Mark which God hath set

XXVIII.

If a Person had delivered up your Body to any one, whom he met in his Way, you would certainly be angry. And do you seel no Shame in delivering up your own Mind to be disconcerted, and confounded by any one, who happens to give you Ill-Language?

XXIX (o).

Duties are univerfally measured by Relations. Is any one a Father? In this are implied, as due, Taking Care of him; submitting to him in all Things; patiently receiving his Reproaches, his Correction. But he is a bad Father. Is your natural Tie then to a good Father? No: but to a Father. Is a Brother unjust? Well: preserve your own Situation towards him. Consider not what be doth; but what you are to do, to keep your own Faculty of Choice in a State conformable to Nature. For another will not hurt you, unless you please. You will then be hurt, when you abink you are hurt. In this manner, therefore, you will find, from [the Idea of] a Neighbour, a Citizen, a General, the [corresponding] Duties, if you accustom yourself to contemplate the [several] Relations.

XXXI.

BE affured, that the effectial Property of Piety towards the Gods, is, to form right Opinions concerning them, as up for us to aim at. Our miffing it, is no Work of His; nor so properly any thing real, as a mere Negative and Failure of our own.

⁽a) This Chapter, except fome very trifling Differences, is the fame with the Fifteenth of the Third Book of the Difcourses; therefore unnecessary to be repeated here.

existing (ϕ) , and as governing the Universe with Goodness and Justice. And fix yourself in this Resolution, to obey them, and yield to them, and willingly follow them in all Events, as produced by the most perfect Understanding. For, thus you will never find fault with the Gods, nor accuse them as neglecting you. And it is not possible for this to be effected any other Way (q), than by withdrawing yourfelf from Things. not in our own Power, and placing Good or Evil in those only which are. For, if you suppose any of the Things, not in our own Power, to be either good or evil; when you are disappointed of what you wish, or incur what you would avoid, you must necessarily find fault with, and blame, the Authors. For every Animal is naturally formed to fly and abhor Things that appear hurtful, and the Causes of them; and to purfue and admire those which appear beneficial, and the Causes of them. It is impracticable then, that one who supposes himself to be hurt, should rejoice in the Person who, he thinks, hurts him; just as it is impossible to rejoice in the Hurt itself. Hence, also, a Father is reviled by a Son, when he doth not impart to him the Things which he takes to be good: and the fuppoling Empire to be a Good, made Pólynices and Eteocles mutually Enemies. On this Account the Husbandman, the Sailor, the Merchant; on this Account those who lose Wives and Children, revile the Gods. For where Interest is, there too is Piety placed. that, whoever is careful to regulate his Defires and Aversions as he ought, is, by the very fame Means, careful of Piety

⁽p) He that cometh to God, must believe that He is; and that He is a Rewarder of them, that diligently feek Him. Heb. xi. 6.

⁽q) Αλλως τε, perhaps, thould be αλλως δε.

likewise. But it is also incumbent on every one to offer Libations, and Sacrifices, and First Fruits, conformably to the Customs of his Country, with Purity; and not in a slovenly Manner, nor negligently, nor sparingly, nor beyond his Ability.

XXXII.

WHEN you have Recourse to Divination, remember, that you know not what the Event will be, and you come to learn it of the Diviner: but of what Nature it is, you know before you come; at least, if you are a Philosopher. For if it is among the Things not in our own Power, it can by no means be either good or evil. Do not, therefore, bring either Defire or Aversion with you to the Diviner, (else you will approach him trembling;) but first acquire a distinct Knowledge, that every Event is indifferent, and nothing to you, of whatever Sort it may be; for it will be in your Power to make a right Use of it; and this no one can hinder: then come with Confidence to the Gods, as your Counsellors: and afterwards, when any Counfel is given you, remember what Counfellors you have affumed; and whose Advice you will neglect, if you disobey. Come to Divination, as Socrates prescribed, in Cases, of which the whole Consideration relates to the Event, and in which no Opportunities are afforded by Reason, or any other Art, to discover the Thing proposed to be learned. When, therefore, it is our Duty to share the Danger of a Friend, or of our Country, we ought not to confult the Oracle, whether we shall share it with them, or not. For, though the Diviner should forewarn you, that the Victims are unfavourable, this Mmm 2 means means no more, than that either Death, or Mutilation, or Exile, is portended. But we have Reason within us: and it directs, even with these Hazards, to stand by our Friend and our Country. Attend therefore to the greater Diviner, the Pythian God; who cast out of the Temple, the Person who gave no Affishance to his Friend, while another was murdering him.

452 The ENCHIRIDION.

XXXIII

IMMEDIATELY prescribe some Character and Form [of Behaviour] to yourself, which you may preserve, both alone, and in Company.

Be for the most part filent: or speak merely what is necessary, and in sew Words. We may however enter, though sparingly, into Discourse sometimes, when Occasion calls for it: but not on any of the common Subjects, of Gladiators, or Horse Races, or athletic Champions, or Feasts; the vulgar Topics of Conversation: but principally not of Men, so as either to blame, or praise, or make Comparisons. If you are able then, by your own Conversation bring over that of your Company to proper Subjects: but, if you happen to be taken among Strangers, be filent.

Let not your (r) Laughter be much, nor on many Occafions, nor profuse.

Avoid Swearing, if poffible, altogether; if not, as far as you are able.

Avoid public and vulgar Entertainments: but, if ever an Occasion calls you to them, keep your Attention upon the ⁽r) See Ecclef. ii. 2. vii. 3-6. Ecclus. xix. 30. xxi. 20.

Stretch, that you may not imperceptibly flide into vulgar Manners. For be affured, that if a Perfon be ever fo found himfelf, yet, if his Companion be infected, he who convertes with him will be infected likewife.

Provide Things relating to the Body no farther than mere Use; as Meat, Drink, Clothing, House, Family. But strike off, and reject, every thing relating to Show and Delicacy.

As far as possible, before Marriage, preserve yourself pure from Familiarities with Women: and, if you indulge them, let it be lawfully (s). But do not therefore be troublesome, and full of Reproofs, to those who use these Libertics; nor frequently boast, that you yourself do not.

If any one tells you, that fuch a Person speaks ill of you, do not make Excuses about what is said of you, but answer; "He doth not know my other Faults, else he would not have mentioned only these."

It is not necessary for you to appear often at public Spectacles: but if ever there is a proper Occasion for you to be there, do not appear more folicitous for any one, than for yourself; that is, wish Things to be only just as they are, and him only to conquer who is the Conqueror: for thus you will meet with no Hindrance. But abstain entirely from Acclamations, and Derision, and violent Emotions. And when you come away, do not discourse a great deal on what hath passed, and what doth not contribute to your own Amendment. For it would appear by fuch Discourse, that you were immoderately struck with the Show.

⁽³⁾ Public Profitutes were allowed by the Laws at Rome and in Greece. The Milichiets, occafioned by Perfons of this Character, fearcely formuch as hinted by the Stoic Philosopher, are the Subject of many beautiful Reflexions in the Book of Proverbs.

454 The ENCHIRIDION.

Go not [of your own Accord] to the Rehearfals of any [Authors], nor appear [at them] readily. But, if you do appear, preferve your Gravity and Sedateness, and at the fame time avoid being morose.

When you are going to confer with any one, and particularly of those in a superior Station, represent to yourself how Socrates (t), or Zeno, would behave in such a Case, and you will not be at a Loss to make a proper Use of whatever may occur.

When you are going to any of the People in Power, reprefent to yourfelf, that you will not find him at Home: that you will not be admitted [into the House]: that the Doors [of his Apartment] will not be opened to you: that he will take no Notice of you. If, with all this, it be your Duty to go, bear what happens, and never fay [to yourfelf], "It was not worth fo much." For this is vulgar, and like a Man disconcerted by Externals (a).

In Parties of Conversation, avoid a frequent and excessive mention of your own Actions, and Dangers. For, however agreeable it may be to yourself to mention the Risques you have run, it is not equally agreeable to others to hear your Adventures. Avoid, likewise, an Endeavour to excite Laughter. For this is a slippery Point, which may throw you into vulgar Manners: and, besides, may be apt to lessen you in the Esteem of your Acquaintance. Approaches to indecent Discourse are likewise dangerous. Whenever, therefore, any thing of this Sort happens, if there be a proper Opportunity, rebuke him who make Advances that Way: or, at least, by Silence, and Blushing, and a forbidding Look, show yourself to be displeased by such Talk.

⁽²⁾ It should be observed here, that, the Mind being thus naturally affected by the Thought of initiating a superior Character, Christians enjoy a singular Advantage, in not being left to study and copy the imperfect and faulty Patterns of Persons no way particularly related to them; but having an authentic Delineation of divine Excellence, samiliarized to their Apprehensions, in Him, who, both in acting and suffering for us, bath left us an Example, that we fould follow his Steps.

 ⁽n) A late Editor of the Enchiridion hath proposed to read διαπεπληρμενε instead of διαβεβλημενε.

XXXIV.

It you are ftruck by the Appearance of any promifed Pleafure, guard yourself against being hurried away by it: but let the Affair wait your Leisure, and procure yourself some Delay. Then bring to your Mind both Points of Time; that in which you shall enjoy the Pleasure, and that in which you will repent and reproach yourself, after you have enjoyed it: and set before you, in Opposition to these, how you will rejoice and applaud yourself, if you abstain. And even, though it should appear to you a seasonable Gratification, take heed, that its enticing, and agreeable, and attractive Force may not subdue you: but set in Opposition to this, how much better it is, to be conscious of having gained so great a Victory.

XXXV.

When you do any thing, from a clear Judgment that it ought to be done, never than the being feen to do it, even 4 though

456 The Enchiridion.

though the World should make a wrong Supposition about it: for, if you do not act right, shun the Action itself; but, if you do, why are you afraid of those who censure you wrongly?

XXXVI.

As the Proposition, Either it is Day, or it is Night, is extremely proper for a disjunctive Argument, but quite improper in a conjunctive one (w): (o, a ta Feast, to chuse the largest Share, is very suitable to the bodily Appetite, but utterly inconsistent with the social Spirit of an Entertainment, When you eat with another, then remember, not only the Value of those Things which are set before you, to the Body; but the Value of that Behaviour, which ought to be observed towards the Person who gives the Entertainment.

XXXVII.

If you have affumed any Character above your Strength, you have both made an ill Figure in that, and quitted one which you might have supported.

XXXVIII.

As, in walking, you take care not to tread upon a Nail, or turn your Foot; fo likewife take care not to hurt the ruling Faculty of your Mind, And, if we were to guard against this in every Action, we should undertake the Action with the greater Safety.

⁽w) The Stoics were fo fond of Logic, that we must not wonder if Epičhetus took a Simile from thence, which to others must appear a strange one.

XXXIX.

The Body is to every one the Measure of the Pollessions proper for it; as the Foot is of the Shoe. If, therefore, you from at this, you will keep the Measure: but, if you move beyond it, you must necessarily be carried forward, as down a Precipice: as in the Case of a Shoe, if you go beyond its Fitness to the Foot, it comes first to be gilded, then purple (x), and then studded with Jewels. For to that which once exceeds a due Measure, there is no Bound.

XI.

Women from Fourteen Years old are flattered with the Title of Mistresses, by the Men. Therefore, perceiving that they are regarded only as qualified to give the Men Pleasure, they begin to adorn themselves; and in that to place all their Hopes. It is worth while, therefore, to fix our Attention on making them sensible, that they are esteemed for nothing else, but the Appearance of a decent, and modest, and discreet Behaviour (y).

XLI.

It is a Mark of Want of Genius, to spend much Time in Things relating to the Body; as, to be long in our Exercises, in Eating, and Drinking, and in the Discharge of other animal Functions. These should be done incidentally, and slightly; and our whole Attention be engaged in the Care of the Understanding.

⁽x) Purple was of high Honour and Price among the Antients.

⁽у) The original Words here, хооµиаг каг андпромен в тогроочин, are almost the same with, ет катастоли кооµию µета андоиз каг охфроочин, µ-Тіт. ії. 9.

XLII.

When any Person doth ill by you, or speaks ill of you, remember, that he acts, or speaks, from a Supposition of its being his (2) Duty. Now, it is not possible, that he should follow what appears right to you, but what appears to to himself. Therefore, if he judges from a wrong Appearance, He is the Person hurt; since He too is the Person deceived. For, if any one should suppose a true Proposition to be false, the Proposition is not hurt; but he who is deceived [about it]. Setting out then from these Principles, you will meekly bear a Person who reviles you: for you will say, upon every Occasion, "It seemed so to him."

XLIII.

EVERY Thing hath two Handles; the one, by which it may be borne; the other, by which it cannot. If your Brother acts unjuftly, do not lay hold on the Action by the Handle of his Injuftice; for by that it cannot be borne: but by the Oppofite, that he is your Brother, that he was brought up with you: and thus you will lay hold on it, as it is to be borne.

⁽a) Epidetus feems, in part, to be miftaken here. For, perhaps, it is oftener from having no Thought at all about Duty, or preferring Inclination to it, than from having a wrong Notion of it, that Perfons are flanderous and injurious: befides, that wrong Notions often arife from Neglect, or Partiality. Suppofing all bad Adions to proceed intirely from Ignorance, or Miftake, puts them on a Level, in point of Freedom from Guilt, with good ones. But, fince many proceed from thence, more or lefs, the Doctrine of this Chapter is, in a confiderable Degree, right: and, fo far as it is, very frongly calls to one's Mind that divine Intercellien— Forgice than I For they know not would they de!

XLIV.

These Reasonings are unconnected: "I am richer than "you; therefore I am better:" "I am more eloquent than "you; therefore I am better." The Connexion is rather this: "I am richer than you; therefore my Property is "greater than yours:" "I am more eloquent than you; "therefore my Style is better than yours." But you, after all, are neither Property, nor Style.

XLV.

DOTH any one bathe (a) in a mighty little Time? Do not fay, that he doth it ill; but, in a mighty little Time. Doth any one drink a great Quantity of Wine? Do not fay, that he doth ill; but, that he drinks a great Quantity. For, unless you perfectly understand the Principle, [from which any one acts], how should you know, if he acts ill? Thus you will not run the Hazard of assenting to any Appearances, but such as you fully comprehend.

XLVI.

NEVER call yourfelf a Philosopher; nor talk a great deal among the Unlearned about Theorems; but act conformably to them. Thus, at an Entertainment, do not talk how Persons ought to eat; but eat as you ought. For remember, that in this manner Socrates also universally avoided all Ostentation. And when Persons came to him, and defired to be recommended by him to Philosophers, he took and recommended them: fo well did he bear being overlooked, So that if ever any Talk should happen among the Unlearned, concerning [philosophic] Theorems, be you, for the most part, filent. For there is great Danger in immediately throwing out what you have not digested. And, if any one tells you, that you know nothing, and you are not nettled at it, then you may be fure, that you have begun your Business. For Sheep do not throw up the Grass, to show the Shepherds how much they have eaten: but, inorems to the Unlearned; but the Actions produced by them, XLVII.

⁽a) See B. IV. c 8. of the Difcourfes.

wardly digefting their Food, they outwardly produce Wool, and Milk. Thus, therefore, do you likewife, not show The-

WHEN you have brought yourfelf to fupply the Necessities of your Body, at a fmall Price, do not pique yourself upon it: nor, if you drink Water, be faying upon every Occasion, " I drink Water." But first consider, how much more sparing and patient of Hardship the Poor are, than we. But if at any time you would enure yourfelf by Exercise to Labour, and bearing hard Trials, [do it] for your own Sake, and not for the World: do not grafp (b) Statues; but, when you are violently thirfty, take a little cold Water in your Mouth, and fourt it out, and tell no body.

XLVIII.

THE Condition and Characteristic of a vulgar Person is, that he never expects either Benefit or Hurt from himfelf;

after they have been digefted.

⁽b) See B. III. c. 12. of the Difcourfes, but from Externals. The Condition and Characteristic of a Philosopher is, that he expects all Hurt and Benefit from himself. The Marks of a Proficient are, that he censures no one, praifes no one, blames no one, accufes no one; fays nothing concerning himfelf, as being any body, or knowing any thing: when he is, in any Instance, hindered, or restrained, he accuses himself; and, if he is praised, he secretly laughs at the Person who praises him; and, if he is censured, he makes no Defence. But he goes about with the Caution of infirm People [after Sickness, or an Accident], dreading to move any thing that is fet right, before it is perfectly fixed. He suppresses (c) all Desire in himself: he transfers his Averfion to those Things only, which thwart the proper Use of our own Faculty of Choice: the Exertion of his active Powers towards any thing is very gentle: if he appears ftupid, or ignorant, he doth not care; and, in a word, he watches. himself as an Enemy, and one in Ambush.

XLIX.

When any one shows himself vain, on being able to understand and interpret the Works of Chrysppus, say to yourself, "Unless Chrysppus had written obscurely, this Person would "have had no Subject for his Vanity. But what do I deserted the subject for his Vanity. But what do I deserted the subject for his Vanity. But what do I deserted the subject for his Vanity. But what do I deserted the subject for his Vanity, and follow her. I ask then, who interprets her; and, sinding Chrysppus doth, I have "Recourse to him. I do not understand his Writings. I seek therefore one to interpret them." So far there is nothing to value myself upon. And when I find an Interpreter, what remains is, to make use of his Instructions This alone is the valuable Thing. But, if I admire nothing but merely the Interpretation, what do I become more than a Grammarian, instead of a Philosopher? Except, indeed, that, instead of Homer, I interpret Chrysippus. When any any one therefore desires me to read Chrysippus to him, I rather blush, when I cannot show my Actions agreeable, and consonant to his Discourse.

⁽c) See c. 2. Note (b).

462 The Enchiridion.

L.

Whatever Rules you have deliberately proposed to your-felf [for the Conduct of Life,] abide by them, as so many Laws, and as if you would be guilty of Impiety in transgressing any of them: and do not regard what any one says of you; for this, after all, is no Concern of yours. How long then will you defer to think yourself worthy of the noblest Improvements, and, in no Instance, to transgress the Distinctions of Reason? You have received the philosophic Theorems, with which you ought to be conversant; and you have been conversant with them. What other Master then do you wait for, to throw upon that the Delay of reforming yourself? You are no longer a Boy; but a grown Man (d). If therefore you will be negligent and slothful, and always add Procrastination to Procrastination, Purpose to Purpose, and fix Day after Day, in which you will attend to yourself;

⁽d) The fame Words, Army πελωες, in the fame Senfe, are used Efth. iv. 13. (where they are opposed to rmπιοι, v. 14.) James iii. 2. and Arθgorms πελωες, Col. i. 28. and πελωος, fingly, 1 Cor. ii. 6. Phol. iii. 15. Hich. v. 14. where it is opposed to rmπιος, v. 13. Which Word is used allo, 1 Cor. iii. 1. as μασκευστίε here.

you will infenfibly continue without Proficiency, and, living and dying, perfevere in being one of the Vulgar. This Inftant then think yourfelf worthy of living as a Man grown up, and a Proficient. Let whatever appears to be the beft, be to you an inviolable Law. And if any Inftance of Pain, or Pleafure, or Glory, or Difgrace be fet before you, remember, that now is the Combat, now the Olympiad comes on, nor can it be put off; and that, by once being worfted, and giving way, Proficiency is loft, or [by the contrary] preferved. Thus Socrates became perfect, improving himfelf by every thing; (a) attending to nothing but Reason. And though you are not yet a Socrates, you ought however to live as one desirous of becoming a Socrates.

LI.

The first and most necessary Topic in Philosophy is, that of the Use of [practical] Theorems; as that, We ought not to lie: the second is, that of Demonstrations; as, Whence it is, that we ought not to lie: the third, that which gives Strength and Articulation to the other two; as, Whence this is a Demonstration. For what is Demonstration? What is Consequence? What Contradiction? What Truth? What Falshood? The third Topic then is necessary, on the Account of the second: and the second, on the Account of the first. But the most necessary, and that whereon we ought to reft, is the first. But we act just on the contrary. For we spend all our Time on the third Topic, and employ all our Diligence about that, and entirely neglect the first. Therefore, at the same time that we lie, we are mighty ready to show how it is demonstrated, that Lying is not right.

⁽c) Phato, in his Crito, introduces Socrates faying this of himfelf. UPTON.

464 The ENCHIRIDION.

LII.

Upon all Occasions, we ought to have these Maxims ready at hand.

Conduct me, Jove, and Thou, O Destiny,
Where-ever Your Decrees have fix'd my Station.
I follow cheerfully: and, did I not,
Wicked and wretched, I must follow shill (f).

Who-e'er yields properly to Fate, is deem'd Wise among Men, and knows the Laws of Heaven (g)

And this Third:

(b) "O Crito, if it thus pleases the Gods, thus let it be. "Anytus and Melitus may kill me indeed: but hurt me "they cannot."

- (f) From a Poem of Cleanthes.
- (g) From Euripides.
- (b) From Plato's Crito, and Apology.

The End of the Enchiridion.

FRAGMENTS

o F

EPICTETUS.

FRAGMENTS

O F

EPICTETUS,

FROM

Stobæus, Antonius, and Maximus (a).

I.

LIFE entangled with Fortune, refembles a wintry Torrent: for it is turbulent, and muddy, and difficult to pass, and violent, and noisy, and of short Continuance.

A Soul conversant with Virtue, refembles a perpetual Fountain: for it is clear, and gentle, and potable, and sweet, and communicative, and rich, and harmles, and innocent.

II.

⁽a) According to Fabricius, in his Bibliotheca Greeca, L. V. c. 20. Stobents was a Heathen: at leaft, he cites only Heathen Authors. He lived about the Beginning of the Fifth Century. Maximus was a Christian, of the Seventh; and Antonius, furnamed Melifa, or the Bee, of the Oo 2 п.

Ir you would be good, first believe that you are bad.

III.

It is better to offend feldom (owning it when we do), and act often wifely, than to fay, we feldom err, and offend frequently.

IV.

CHASTISE your Passions, that they may not punish you.

v.

BE not so much ashamed of what is void of Glory, as studious to shun what is void of Truth.

VI.

IF you would be well fpoken of, learn to fpeak well of others. And, when you have learned to fpeak well of them, endeavour likewise to do well to them; and thus you will reap the Fruit of being well spoken of by them.

VII.

FREEDOM is the Name of Virtue; and Slavery, of Vice: and both these are Actions of Choice. But neither of them

Eighth Century, or later; fome fay, of the Twelfth. Their Collections are printed together. The Editions of Stobaus are extremely incorrect: and in him and Maximus, the Names of the Authors quoted either were frequently wrong originally, or have been altered fince. This may have happened to Automius alfo: and, confequently, fome of the Sayings afterbed to EpicActus may not have been his. Indeed, many of thee Fragments have very little the Turn of his other Difcourfes. The two first, particularly, have a much stronger Resemblance of the Style and Manner of M. Antonius.

belongs to Things, in which Choice hath no Share. But Fortune (b) is accufromed to dispose at her Pleasure of the Body, and those Things relating to the Body in which Choice hath no Share. For no one is a Slave, whose Choice is free. Fortune is an evil Chain to the Body; and Vice, to the Soul. For he whose Body is unbound, and whose Soul is chained, is a Slave. On the contrary, he whose Body is chained, and his Soul unbound, is free, The Chain of the Body, Nature unbinds by Death; and Vice, by (c) Money: the Chain of the Soul, Virtue unbinds, by Learning, and Experience, and philosophic Exercise.

VIII.

If you would live with Tranquillity and Content, endeavour to have all who live with you, good. And you will have them good, by inftructing the Willing, and difinifing the Unwilling (d). For together with the Fugitives, will Wickedness and Slavery fly: and with those who remain with you, will Goodness and Liberty be left.

IX.

(e) IT is fcandalous, that he who fweetens his Drink by ⁽b) The Sense absolutely requires, that $\psi_{\nu\chi\eta}$ should be $\tau_{\nu\chi\eta}$; and it is so translated.

⁽c) Perhaps, by bribing a Judge, or a Jailer. However, the Sense is not clear.

⁽d) The Translation omits επειτα κεχειρομετους, which is in Antonius and Manieus, but not in Stobeus.

⁽c) This Sentence is afcribed to Pythagoras, by Antonius and Maximus de rationali Serm. 27. p. 75.

have milledown

the Gifts of the Bees, should, by Vice, embitter Reason, the Gift of the Gods.

X.

No one, who is a Lover of Money, a Lover of Pleasure, or a Lover of Glory, is likewise a Lover of Mankind: but only he who is a Lover of Virtue.

XI

As you would not wish to fail in a large, and finely decorated, and gilded Ship, and fink: so neigher is it eligible to inhabit a grand and sumptuous House, and be in a Storm of Passions and Cares.

XII.

When we are invited to an Entertainment, we take what we find: and, if any one should bid the Master of the House set Fish, or Tarts, before him, he would be thought absurd. Yet, in the World, we ask the Gods for what they do not give us; and that, though they have given us so many Things.

XIII.

They are pretty Fellows indeed, faid he, who value themfelves on Things not in our own Power. I am a better Man than you, fays one; for I have many Eftates, and you are pining with Hunger. I have been Conful, fays another: I am a Governor, a third; and I have a fine Head of Hair, fays a fourth. Yet one Horfe doth not fay to another; "I man better than you; for I have a great deal of Hay, and a great deal of Oats; and I have a Gold Bridle, and embroidered Trappings:" but, "I am fwifter than you."

And every Creature is better or worfe, from its own good or bad Qualities. Is Man, then, the only Creature, which hath no natural good Quality? And must we consider Hair, and Clothes, and Ancestors, [to judge of him]?

XIV.

PATIENTS are displeased with a Physician, who doth not prefcribe to them; and think he gives them over. And why are none fo affected towards a Philosopher, as to conclude, he despairs of their Recovery to a right Way of Thinking, if he tells them nothing, which may be for their Good? a ad has

THEY who have a good Constitution of Body, support Heats and Colds: and fo they, who have a right Constitution of Soul, bear [the Attacks of] Anger, and Grief, and immoderate Joy, and the other Passions.

XVI.

Examine yourself, whether you had rather be rich, or happy: and, if rich, be affured, that this is neither a Good, nor altogether in your own Power: but, if happy, that this is both a Good, and in your own Power: fince the one is a temporary Loan of Fortune (f), and the other depends on Choice.

XVII

As when you fee a Viper, or an Asp, or a Scorpion, in an Ivory or Gold Box, you do not love, or think it happy, ⁽f) The subsequences feoms to be merely an Interpolation, and is omitted in the Translation.

on Account of the Magnificence of the Materials, in which it is inclosed; but shun and detest it, because it is of a pernicious Nature: so likewise, when you see Vice lodged in the midst of Wealth, and the swelling Pride of Fortune, be not struck by the Splendour of the Materials, with which it is surrounded; but despise the base Alloy of its Manners.

XVIII.

RICHES are not among the Number of Things, which are good: Prodigality is of the Number of thofe, which are evil: Rightness of Mind, of those which are good. Now Rightness of Mind invites to Frugality, and the Acquisition of Things that are good: but Riches invite to Prodigality, and seduce from Rightness of Mind. It is difficult therefore for a rich Person to be right-minded; or a right-minded Person, rich (g).

XIX.

(b) ----- Just as if you had been bred and born in a Ship, you would not be eager to become the Pilot. For neither would the Ship have any natural and perpetual Connexion (i) with you there; nor have Riches here; but Reason everywhere. That therefore, which is natural and congenial to you, Reason, think likewise to be in a peculiar Manner your own, and take care of it.

⁽g) How bardly shall they that have Riches, enter into the Kingdom of God! Mark x. 23.

⁽b) The former Part of the Sentence feems to be wanting; in which, probably, the Author had faid, That they who have hereditary Wealth, should not think the Management of it their chief Concern: just as, &c.

⁽i) Elvisia should, perhaps, be gunnatas.

XX.

IF you were born in Perfia, you would not endeavour to live in Greece; but to be happy in the Place where you are. Why then, if you are born in Poverty, do you endeavour to be rich, and not to be happy in the Condition where you are?

XXI.

As it is better to lie straitened for Room upon a little Couch in Health, than to toss upon a wide Bed in Sickness; so it is better to contract yourself within the Compass of a small Fortune, and be happy, than to have a great one, and he wretched.

XXII.

It is not Poverty that causes Sorrow; but covetous (k) Desires: nor do Riches deliver from Fear; but Reasoning. If, therefore, you acquire a Habit of Reasoning, you will neither desire Riches, nor complain of Poverty.

XXIII.

A Horse is not elated, and doth not value himfelf on his fine Manger or Trappings, or Saddle-cloths; nor a Bird, on the warm Materials of its Neft: but the former, on the Swiftness of his Fect; and the latter, of its Wings. Do not you, therefore, glory in your Eating, or Drefs; or, briefly, in any external Advantage; but in Good-nature and Beneficence.

⁽k) The Latin Translator supposes, that ευθυμια should be επιθυμια, which the Sense requires.

XXIV.

THERE is a Difference between living well, and living profulely. The one arises from Contentment, and Order, and Decency, and Frugality: the other from Diffoluteness, and Luxury, and Diforder, and Indecency. In fhort, to the one belongs true Praise; to the other, Censure. If, therefore, you would live well, do not seek to be praised for Profuseness.

XXV.

LET the first satisfying of Appetite be always the Meafure to you of eating and drinking; and Appetite itself the Sawce and the Pleasure. Thus you will never take more [Food] than is necessary; nor will you want Cooks: and you will be contented with whatever Drink falls in your Way (I).

XXVI.

BE careful not to (m) thrive by the Meats in your Stomach; but by Chearfulnes in the Soul. For the former, as you fee, are evacuated, and carried off together; but the latter, though the Soul be (n) separated, remains uncorrupted, and sincere.

XXVII.

⁽¹⁾ I have not translated the Fragment which follows this in Mr., Upton; because I do not understand it.

⁽m) There are various Readings of this Fragment; but none which makes the Sense very clear.

⁽n) It is doubtful whether the Meaning be, that the Effect of a chearful Behaviour will remain after the Perfon is dead, or after he is separated from the Company.

XXVII.

In every Feaft remember, that there are two Guefts to be entertained, the Body, and the Soul: and that what you give the Body, you prefently lofe; but what you give the Soul, remains for ever.

XXVIII.

Do not mix Anger with Profusion, and set them before your Guests. Profusion makes its Way through the Body, and is quickly gone: but Anger, when it hath penetrated the Soul, abides for a long Time. Take care, not to be transported with Anger, and affront your Guests, at a great Expence; but rather delight them at a cheap Rate, by gentle Behaviour.

XXIX.

TAKE care at your Meals, that the Attendants be not more in Number than those whom they are to attend. For it is absurd, that many Persons should wait on a few Chairs.

XXX.

It would be best, if both while you are personally makeing your Preparations, and while you are feasting at Table, you could give among the Servants Part of what is before you (o). But, if such a Thing be difficult at that Time, remember, that you, who are not weary, are attended by those who are; you, who are cating and drinking, by those who are not; you who are talking, by those who are tilent;

 ⁽φ) Geffier, for κυθέτριας, reads καιτώνεις, which feems the befl Senfe, and is followed in the Translation.

you who are at Eafe, by those who are under Constraint (p) and thus you will never be heated into any unreasonable Passion yourself; nor do any Mischief, by provoking another.

XXXI.

STRIFE and Contention are always abfurd; but particularly unbecoming at Table Convertations. For a Person warmed with Wine will never either teach, or be convinced by, one who is sober. And where-ever Sobriety is wanting, the End will show, that you have exerted yourself to no Purpose.

XXXII.

Grashoppers are mufical; but Snails are dumb. The one rejoice in being wet; and the others, in being warm. Then the Dew calls out the one; and for this they come forth: but, on the contrary, the Noon-day Sun awakens the other; and in this they fing. If, therefore, you would be a mufical and harmonious Perfon, whenever, in Parties of Drinking, the Soul is bedewed with Wine, fuffer her not to go forth, and defile herfelf. But when, in Parties of Converfation, the glows by the Beams of Reason, then command her to speak from Inspiration, and utter the Oracles of Justice.

XXXIII.

Consider him, with whom you converse, in one of these three Ways; either as superior to you [in Abilities], or inferior, ferior, or equal. If fuperior, you ought to hear him, and be convinced: if inferior, to convince (q) him: if equal, to agree with him: and thus you will never be found guilty of Litigiouthess.

⁽p) There is fomething flrikingly beautiful and humane in this Confideration about Servants.

XXXIV.

It is better, by yielding to Truth, to conquer Opinion; than, by yielding to Opinion, to be defeated by Truth.

XXXV.

Is you feek Truth, you will not feek to conquer by all possible Means: and, when you have found Truth, you will have a Security against being conquered.

XXXVI.

TRUTH conquers by itself; Opinion, by foreign Aids.

XXXVII.

It is better, by living with one free Person, to be searless, and free, than to be a Slave in Company with many.

XXXVIII.

What you avoid fuffering yourfelf, attempt not to impose on others. You avoid Slavery, for Instance: take care not to enslave. For, if you can bear to exact Slavery from others, you appear to have been first yourself a Slave. For Vice hath no Communication with Virtue; nor Freedom with Slavery. As a Person in Health would not wish to be attended by the Sick, nor to have those who live with him be in a State of ⁽q) $A\pi a \theta a v$, probably, should be $\pi a \theta a v$; and is so translated. The x seems to have been added from the preceding Word.

Sickness; fo neither would a Person who is free, bear to be served by Slaves, or to have those who live with him in a State of Slavery.

XXXIX.

WHOEVER you are, that would live at a Diffance from Slaves, deliver yourfelf from Slavery. And you will be free, if you deliver yourfelf from [the Power of] Appetite. For neither was Arifides called Juft, nor Epaminondas, Divine, nor Lycurgus, a Preferver, because they were rich, and were ferved by Slaves; but because, being poor, they delivered Greece from Slavery.

XL.

Is you would have your House securely inhabited, imitate the Spartan Lycurgus. And as he did not inclose his City with Walls, but fortified the Inhabitants with Virtue, and preserved the City always free; so do you likewise: not surround yourself with a great Court-yard, nor raise high Towers; but strengthen those that live with you by Benevolence, and Fidelity, and Friendship. And thus nothing hurtful will enter, even if the whole Band of Wickedness was set in Array against it.

XLI,

Do not hang your House round with Tablets, and Pictures; but adorn it with Sobriety. For those are merely foreign, and a (r) fading Deception of the Eyes: but this, a congenial, and indelible, and perpetual Ornament to the House.

⁽r) In Stoherus the Word is επικουρος. Gesner, whom Mr. Upton follows, gueffed it should be επικρος. Επικηρος, which the Translation suppose, is a less Alteration, and makes a proper Opposition to what follows.

XLII.

INSTEAD of Herds of Oxen, endeavour to affemble Flocks of Friends about your House.

XLIII.

As a Wolf refembles a Dog, fo doth a Flatterer, and an Adulterer, and a Parafite, refemble a Friend. Take heed, therefore, that, instead of Guardian Dogs, you do not inadvertently admit ravening Wolves.

XLIV.

HE is void of true Taste, who strives to have his House admired, by decorating it with a showish Outside: but to adorn our Characters by the Gentleness of a communicative Temper, is at once a Proof of good Taste, and good Nature.

XLV.

IF you admire little Things, in the first place, you will never (s) be thought to deserve great ones: but, if you defpise little Things, you will be greatly admired.

XLVI.

NOTHING is meaner than the Love of Pleasure, the Love of Gain, and Insolence. Nothing is nobler than Magnanimity, Meekness, and Good-nature.

Πρωτον μέγωλων αξιωθηση is the Text of Steheus. Mr. Upten puts in ουκ, which the Translation follows. Απαξιωθηση is a finaller Change, and the fame Senfe.

XLVII.

PRODUCING the Sentiments of those intractable Philosophers, who do not think [the Enjoyment of] Pleasure to be [in itself] the natural State of Man; but merely an adventitious Circumstance of those Things, in which his natural State confists, Justice, Sobriety, and Freedom. For what manner of Reason then should the Soul rejoice, and feel a Serenity from the lesser Good of the Body; as Epicurus says [it doth]; and-not be pleased with its own Good, which is the very greatest? And yet Nature hath given me likewise a Sense of Shame: and I am covered with Blushes, when I think I have uttered any indecent Expression. This Emotion will not suffer me to lay down Pleasure as [in itself] a Good, and the End of Life.

XLVIII.

The Ladies at Rome have Plato's Republic in their Hands, because he allows a Community of Wives: for they attend merely to the Words of the Author, and not to his Sense. For he doth not first order one Man and one Woman to marry and live together, and then allow a Community of Wives: but he abolishes that kind of Marriage, and introduces one of another kind (t). And, in general, Men are pleased in finding out Excuses for their own Faults. Yet Philosophy says, it is not fit even to move a Finger without some Reason.

⁽t) This, and other shocking Things in Plate's Republic, shew, how apt even wife Men are to err, without a Guide.

XLIX.

 T_{HE} more rarely the Objects of Pleasure occur, the more delightful they are.

L.

WHENEVER any one exceeds Moderation, the most delightful Things may become the most undelightful.

LI.

Agriptinus was justly entitled to Praise on this Account, that, though he was a Man of the highest Worth, he never praised himself; but blushed, even if another praised him. And he was a Man of such a Character, as to write in praise of every harsh Event that befell him: if he was severish, of a Fever; if disgraced, of Disgrace; if banished, of Banishment. And, when once, as he was going to dine, a Messenger brought him word, that Nero ordered him to Banishment; Well then, says Agrippinus, we will dine at Aricia (u).

LII.

DIOGENES affirmed no Labour to be good, unless the End was a due State and Tone of the Soul, and not of the Body.

LIII.

As a true Balance is neither fet right by a true one, nor ^{(&}quot;) See Discourses, B. I. c. 1.

482 FRAGMENTS.

judged by a falfe one: (w) so likewise a just Person is neither set right by just Persons, nor judged by unjust ones.

LIV.

As what is straight hath no need of what is straight, so neither what is just, of what is just, [to assist or amend it.]

LV.

Do not give Judgment from another Tribunal, before you have been judged yourfelf at the Tribunal of Juftice (x).

LVI.

Is you would give a just Sentence, mind neither Parties, nor Pleaders; but the Cause itself.

LVII.

You will commit the fewest Faults in judging, if you are faultless in your own Life.

LVIII.

It is better, by giving a just Judgment, to be (7) blamed by him who is defervedly condemned, than, by giving an unjust Judgment, to be justly centured by Nature.

LIX.

As the Touch-stone which tries Gold, is not itself tryed by the Gold; such is he, who hath the Rule of judging.

⁽¹⁰⁾ Compare this and the next Fragment with 1 Cor. ii. 15.

⁽x) Sec Rom. xiv. 10.

⁽y) The Antithefis feems to require, that αξιως should be αθικως, and the Translation—unjustly blaimed by him, who is condemned.
LX,

LX.

IT is fcandalous for a Judge to be judged by others.

LXI.

As nothing is straighter that what is straight, so nothing is juster than what is just (\approx).

LXII.

Who among you do not admire the Action of Lycurgus the Lacedemonian? For when he had been deprived of one of his Eyes, by one of the Citizens, and the People had delivered the young Man to him, to be punished in whatever Manner he should think proper; Lycurgus forbore to give him any Punishment. But, having instructed, and rendered him a good Man, he brought him into the Theatre: and, while the Lacedemonians were struck with Admiration; "I received," says he, "this Person from you, in—"jurious and violent, and I restore him to you gentle, and "a good Citizen."

LXIII.

WHEN Pittacus had been unjuftly treated by some Person, and had the Power of chastisting him, he let him go; saying, "Forgiveness is better than Punishment: for the one is the Proof of a gentle, the other of a savage Nature."

LXIV.

- But, above all, this is the Bufiness of Nature, to con-⁽x) The Stoics held all Virtues, and all Faults to be equal: and this Fragment is one of their Illustrations of that Paradox.

nect and mutually adapt the Exertion of the active Powers (a) to the Appearance of what is fit and beneficial.

LXV.

IT is the Character of the most mean-spirited and foolish Men, to suppose, they shall be despised by others; unless, by every Method, they hurt those who are first their Enemies (b).

LXVI.

When you are going to attack any one with Vehemence and Threatning, remember to fay first to yourself, that you are [by Nature] a gentle Animal, and that by doing nothing violent, you shall live without Repentance, and without Need of being fet right.

LXVII.

We ought to know, that it is not easy for a Man to form a Principle of Action, unless he daily speaks and hears the fame Things; and, at the fame time, accommodates them to the Use of Life.

⁽a) The Text has THS-partagias; but the true Reading feems evidently to be Tn partagia; and this the Translation follows.

⁽b) Το δε οιεσθαι ευκαταφρονητους τοις αλλοις εσεσθαι, εαν μη τους πρωτους ερθρους παντι τροπω ελαφωμεν, σφοδρα αρεννών και ανοπτών ανθρώπων. φαικέν γαο τον ευχαταφρονητον, νοκισθαί μεν και κατά το δυγατον είναι Ελαψαί. Λλλα πολυ μαλλον νοειται κατα το δυνατον ειναι ωφελειν.

This is the Whole of the Fragment: of which only the first Part, which was too good to be omitted, is translated. The rest I do not understand.

LXVIII.

NICIAS was so intent on Business, that he often asked his Domestics, whether he had bathed, and whether he had dined.

LXIX.

While Archimedes was intent on his Diagrams, his Servants drew him away by Violence, and anointed (c) him; and, after his Body was anointed, he traced his Figures upon that.

LXX.

WHEN Lampis, the Sea Commander, was asked how he acquired Riches: "A great deal," said he, "without Difficulty, but a little with Labour."

LXXI.

Solon, when he was filent at an Entertainment, being afked by Periander, whether he was filent for Want of Words, or from Folly; "No Fool," answered he, "can "be filent at a Feaft."

LXXII.

Consult nothing so much, upon every Occasion, as Safety. Now it is fafer to be filent, than to speak: and omit speaking whatever is not accompanied with Sense and Reason.

LXXIII.

As Light-houses in Havens, by kindling a great Flame from a few Faggots, afford a confiderable Affistance to Ships wandering on the Sea: fo an illustrious Person, in a State harrassied by Storms, while he is contented with little himself, confers great Benefits on his Fellow-Citizens.

⁽e) The Ancients anointed the Body every Day.

LXXIV.

— As you would certainly, if you undertook to fteer a Ship, learn the Steerfman's Art. For it will be in your Power, as, in that Cafe, to fteer the whole Ship; fo, in this, the whole State.

LXXV.

IF you have a Mind to adorn your City by confecrated Monuments, first confecrate in yourself the most beautiful Monument of Gentleness, and Justice, and Benevolence.

LXXVI.

You will confer the greatest Benefits on your City, not by raising the Roofs, but by exalting the Souls [of your Fellow-Citizens]. For it is better, that great Souls should live in small Habitations, than that abject Slaves should burrow in great Houses.

LXXVII.

Do not variegate the Structure of your Walls with Eubean and Spartan Stone: but adorn both the Minds of the Citizens, and of those who govern them, by the Greeian Education. For Cities are made good Habitations by the Sentiments of those who live in them; not by Wood and Stone.

LXXVIII.

As, if you were to breed Lions, you would not be folicitous about the Magnificence of their Dens, but the Qualities of the Animals [themfelves]: fo, if you undertake to prefide over your Fellow-Citizens, be not so solicitous about the Magnificence of the Buildings, as careful of the Fortitude of those who inhabit them.

LXXIX.

As a skilful Manager of Horses doth not feed the good Colts, and suffer the unruly ones to starve; but feeds them both alike; only whips one more, to make him draw equally with his Fellow: so a Man of Care, and Skill in the Art of Civil Government, endeavours to do (d) Good to the well-disposed Citizens, but not at once to destroy those that are otherwise. He by no means denies Subsistence to cither of them: only he disciplines and urges on, with the greater Vehemence, him who resists Reason and the Laws.

LXXX.

As neither a Goofe is alarmed by Gaggling, nor a Sheep by Bleating: fo neither be you terrified by the Voice of a fenfeles Multitude.

LXXXI.

As you do not comply with a Multitude, when it injudiciously asks of you any Part of your own Property: so neither be disconcerted by a Mob, when it endeavours to force you to any unjust Compliance.

⁽d) The Latin Version supposes that ποιει should be ευποιει. This the Sense seems to require; and it is so translated.

LXXXII.

PAY in, before you are called upon, what is due to the Public, and you will never be asked for what is not due.

LXXXIII.

As the Sun doth not wait for Prayers and Incantations, to be prevailed on to rife, but immediately finines forth, and is received with univerfal Salutation: fo, neither do you wait for Applaufes, and Shouts, and Praifes, in order to do Good; but be a voluntary Benefactor; and you will be beloved like the Sun (e).

LXXXIV.

A SHIP ought not to be fixed by one Anchor; nor Life on a fingle Hope (f).

LXXXV.

WE ought not to firetch either our Legs or our Hopes to a Point they cannot reach.

LXXXVI.

THALES, being asked, what was the most universally enjoyed of all Things, answered, "Hope: for they have "it, who have nothing esse."

LXXXVII.

Ir is more necessary for the Soul to be cured, than the Body: for it is better to die, than to live ill.

⁽r) This Simile is peculiarly beautiful; and hath the Force of an Argument in the Difcourse of a Stoic, who held the Sun to be animated; and intelligent.

⁽¹⁾ This Fragment, in Stobaus, is ascribed to Socrates.

LXXXVIII.

PYRRHO used to say, "There is no Difference between "Living and Dying," A Person asked him, Why then do not you die? "Because," answered Pyrrho, "there is no "Difference (g.)."

LXXXIX.

NATURE is admirable, and, as Xenophon fays, fond of Life. Hence we love, and take care of the Body, which is of all Things the most unpleasant and squalid. For if we were obliged, only for five Days, to take care of our Neighbour's Body, we could not support it. For only confider what it would be, when we get up in a Morning, to wash the Teeth of others, and do all requifite Offices befides. reality, it is wonderful we should love a Thing, which, every Day, demands so much Attendance. Iftuff this Sack, and then I empty it again. What is more troublesome? But I must obey God. Therefore I stay, and bear to wash, and feed, and clothe this paultry, miserable Body. When I was younger, he commanded me fomething still more, and I bore it. And will you not, when Nature, which gave the Body, takes it away, bear that? "I love it;" fay you. Well: this is what I have just been observing: and this very Love hath Nature given you: but she also says, " Now let it go, and " have no farther Trouble."

XC.

WHEN a young Man dies, [an old one] accuses the Gods, that, at the Time when He ought to be at rest, he is encumbered with the Troubles of Life. Yet, (b) nevertheles, when Death approaches, he wifhes to live; and fends for the Phyfician, and intreats him to omit no Care or Pains. It is marvellous, that Men should not be willing either to live, or die.

XCI.

To a longer and worse Life, a shorter and better is by all Means to be preferred by every one.

XCII.

WHEN we are Children, our Parents deliver us to the Care of a Tutor; who is continually to watch over us, that we get no Hurt. When we are become Men, God delivers us to the Guardianship of an implanted Conscience. We ought by no means then to despise this Guardian: for it will both displease (i) God, and we shall be Enemies to our own conscious Principle.

XCIII.

RICHES ought to be used as the Materials of some Action; and not upon every Occasion alike.

XCIV.

ALL Men should rather wish for Virtue than Wealth; which is dangerous to the Foolish: for Vice is increased by Riches. And in proportion as any one is destitute of Under-

⁽h) HITTOF is dropt out of the Text, probably, by Reason of the Similitude of the next Word oran.

⁽i) Amaperor, perhaps, should be amaperon standing, into the more injurious Excess he slies out, by having the Means of gratifying the Rage of his Pleasures.

XCV.

What ought not to be done, be not even suspected [or, entertain not even a Thought] of doing (k).

XCVI.

Deliberate much before you fay and do any thing: for it will not be in your Power to recall what is faid or done.

XCVII.

EVERY Place is fafe to him who lives with Juftice.

XCVIII:

Caows pick out the Eyes of the Dead, when they are no longer of any Use. But Flatterers destroy the Soul of the Living, and blind its Eyes.

XCIX.

THE Anger of a Monkey, and the Threats of a Flatterer, deferve equal Regard.

C.

Kindly receive those, who are willing to give good Advice: but not those, who upon every Occasion are eager to flatter. For the former truly see what is advantageous: but the latter consider only the Opinions of their Superiors; and imitate the Shadows of Bodies, by nodding Affent to what they say.

⁽k) This Fragment is afcribed to Pythagoras, STOB. Serm. I.

CI.

A Monitor ought, in the first place, to have a Regard to the Delicacy and Sense (1) of Shame of the Person admonished. For they, who are hardened against a Blush, are incorrigible.

CII.

It is better to admonish than reproach: for the one is mild and friendly; the other, harsh and affronting: and the one corrects the Faulty; the other only convicts them.

CIII.

(m) COMMUNICATE to Strangers, and Persons in Need, according to your Ability (o). For he who gives nothing to the Needy, shall receive nothing in his own Need.

CIV.

A Person once brought Clothes to a Pirate, who had been caft afhore, and almost killed by the Severity of the Weather; then carried him to his House, and furnished him with other Conveniences. Being reproached by some Person, for doing Good to bad People; "I have paid this Regard," answered he, " not to the Man, but to human Nature."

⁽I) Φημης in Antonius and Maximus is αισχυνης. And it is fo translated here.

⁽m) This and the following Fragment are from Antonius and Maximus, and in the Margin stand there, Democriti, Isocratis, & Episteti: so, probably, they ought to be put in the second Class.

⁽n) The Expression in the Original is the same with Luke xi. 41.

CV.

WE ought not to chuse every Pleasure: but that, which tends to something good.

CVI.

IT is the Character of a wife Man, to refift Pleasure; and of a Fool, to be enslaved by it.

CVII.

In all Vice, Pleasure being presented like a Bait, draws fensual Minds to the Hook of Perdition.

CVIII.

CHUSE rather to punish your Appetites, than to be punished by them.

CIX.

No one is free, who doth not command himfelf.

CX.

 $T_{\rm HE}$ Vine bears three Clusters. The first, of Pleasure; the second, of Intoxication; the third, of Outrage (0).

CXI.

Do not talk much over Wine, to show your Learning : for your Discourse will be loathsome.

CXII.

HE is a Drunkard, who takes more than three Glaffes: and though he be not drunk, he hath exceeded Moderation.

⁽a) This Saying is likewise ascribed to Pythagoras.

CXIII.

(p) LET Discourse of God be renewed every Day, preferably to our Food.

CXIV.

THINK oftener of God, than you breathe.

CXV,

IF you always remember, that God ftands by, an Inspector of whatever you do, either in Soul or Body: you will never err, either in your Prayers or Actions; and you will have God abiding with you.

CXVI.

As it is pleasant to view the Sea from the Shore: so it is pleasant to one who hath escaped, to remember his past Labours.

CXVII.

THE Intention of the Law is, to benefit human Life: but it cannot, when Men themfelves chuse to suffer: for it discovers its proper Virtue in the Obedient.

CXVIII.

As Phyficians are the Prefervers of the Sick; fo are the Laws, of the Injured.

CXIX.

The justest Laws are the truest.

⁽p) See Deut. vi. 7. Pfal. 1xxi. 15, 24. cv. 2.

CXX.

IT is decent to yield to a Law, to a Governor, and to a wifer Man.

CXXI.

THINGS, done contrary to Law, are the fame as if they were undone.

CXXII.

In Prosperity, it is very easy to find a Friend; in Adverfity, nothing is so difficult.

CXXIII.

Time delivers Fools from Grief: and Reason, wise Men.

CXXIV.

HE is a Man of Sense, who doth not grieve for what he hath not; but rejoices in what he hath.

CXXV.

EPICTETUS being asked, how a Person might grieve his Enemy, answered, "By doing as well as possible "himself."

CXXVI.

LET no wife Man estrange himself from the Government of the State: for it is both impious to withdraw from being useful to those that need it, and cowardly to give way to the Worthles. For it is foolish to chuse rather to be governed $1$, than to govern well.

CXXVII.

CXXVII.

Nothing is more (q) becoming a Governor, than to despise no one, nor be insolent; but to preside over all impartially.

CXXVIII.

Any Person may live happy in Poverty; but few, in Wealth and Power. So great is the Advantage of Poverty, that no (r) Man, observant of the Laws of Life, would change it for difreputable Wealth: unless, indeed, Themisseless, the Son of Neocles, the most wealthy of the Athenians, in a Poverty of Virtue, was better than Arishides and Socrates. But both himself and his Wealth are perished, and without a Name. For a bad Man loses all in Death; but Virtue is eternal.

CXXIX.

[Remember] that fuch is, and was, and will be, the Nature of the World; nor it is possible that Things should be otherwise, than they now are: and that not only Men, and other Animals upon Earth, partake of this Change and Transformation, but the Divinities also. For indeed even the four Elements are transformed and changed up and down: and Earth becomes Water, and Water Air, and this again is transformed into other Things. And the same Manner of Transformation happens from Things above to those below. Whoever endeavours to turn his Mind towards these Points, and persuade himself to receive with Willingness ⁽q) Αλλο feems a false Reading for μαλλον.

⁽r) If any one thinks this Sense of roμιμοs harsh, or unsuitable, be may read, φροσιμος, prudent.

what cannot be avoided, he will pass his Life with Moderation and Harmony.

CXXX.

HE who is discontented with Things present, and allotted by Fortune, is unskilful in Life. But he who bears them, and the Consequences arising from them, nobly and rationally, is worthy to be esteemed a good Man.

CXXXI

ALL Things obey, and are subservient to, the World (u); the Earth, the Sea, the Sun, and other Stars, and the Plants and Animals of the Earth. Our Body likewise obeys it, in being sick, and well, and young, and old, and passing through the other Changes, whenever That decrees. It is therefore reasonable, that what depends on ourselves, that is, our Judgment, should not be the only Rebel to it. For the World is powerful, and superior, and consults the best for us, by governing us in Conjunction with the Whole. Farther: Opposition, besides that it is unreasonable, and produces nothing except a vain Struggle, throws us likewise into Pain and Sorrows.

⁽u) The Stoics often confound the Idea of God with that of the World.

[498]

(a) The following FRAGMENTS are ascribed jointly to Epictetus and other Authors.

I.

ONTENTMENT, as it is a short and delightful Way, hath much Gracefulness and little Trouble.

II.

FORTIFY yourself with Contentment: for this is an impregnable Fortress.

III.

PREFER nothing to Truth, not even the Choice of Friendfhip, lying within the Reach of the Passions: for by them Justice is both confounded and darkened.

IV.

TRUTH is an immortal and eternal Thing. It beflows, not a Beauty which Time will wither, nor a Boldness of which the Sentence of a Judge can (b) deprive us; but [the Knowlege of] what is just and lawful, diffinguishing from them, and confusing, what is unjust.

⁽a) I have followed Mr. Upton's Division: but many Fragments in the foregoing Class properly belong to this.

⁽b) Αφωιρει την, probably, should be αφαιρετην, and is so translated.

24

v.

WE should have neither a blunt Sword, nor an (c) ineffectual Boldness of Speech.

VI.

NATURE has given Man one Tongue, but two Ears, that we may hear twice as much as we speak.

VII.

Nothing is in reality either pleasant or unpleasant by Nature; but all Things are effected by Custom.

VIII.

CHUSE the best Life: for Custom will make it pleasant.

IX.

CHUSE rather to leave your Children well instructed, than rich. For the Hopes of the Learned are better than the Riches of the Ignorant.

x.

A DAUGHTER is a Possession to a Father; which is not his own.

XI.

THE fame Person advised the Leaving Modesty to Children, rather than Gold.

XII.

THE Reproach of a Father is an agreeable Medicine: for the Profit is greater than the Pain.

⁽c) This Saying is afcribed by Stobeus to Socrates. Ατωκτον, ditorderly, is there απρακτον, ineffectual: which I have preferred.

FRAGMENTS.

500

XIII.

HE who fucceeds in a Son-in-Law, finds a Son: he who fails in one, loses likewise a Daughter.

XIV.

 $T_{\rm HE}$ Worth of Learning, like that of Gold, is efteemed in every Place.

XV.

HE who exercises Wisdom, exercises the Knowlege of God.

XVI.

 T_{HERE} is no Animal fo beautiful, as a Man adorned by Learning.

XVII.

WE ought to fly the Friendship of the Wicked, and the Enmity of the Good.

XVIII.

Necessitous Circumstances prove Friends, and detect Enemies.

XIX.

WE ought to do well by our Friends, when they are prefent; and fpeak well of them, when they are absent.

XX.

LET not him think he is loved by any, who loves none.

XXI.

WE ought to chuse both a Physician and a Friend, not the most agreeable, but the most useful.

XXII.

XXII.

Ir you would lead a Life without Sorrow, confider Things which will happen, as if they had already happened.

XXIII.

BE exempt from Grief; not like irrational Creatures, from Infentibility; nor from Inconfideratenes, like Fools: but like a Man of Virtue, making. Reason the Remedy for Grief.

XXIV.

THEY whose Minds are the least grieved by Calamities, and whose Actions struggle the most against them, are the greatest both in public and in private Life.

XXV.

THEY who are well instructed, like those who are exereised in the Palæstra, if they happen to fall, quickly and dextrously rise again from Misfortunes.

XXVI.

WE ought to call in Reason, like a good Physician, to our Assistance in Missortunes.

XXVII.

A Fool intoxicated by a long Courfe of good Fortune, as by one of Drinking, becomes more fenfeless.

XXVIII.

ENVY is the Adversary of the Fortunate.

XXIX.

HE who remembers what Man is, is discontented at nothing which happens.

XXX.

A PILOT and a fair Wind are necessary to a happy Voyage: Reason and Art, to a happy Life.

XXXI.

Good Fortune, like ripe Fruit, ought to be enjoyed while it is prefent.

XXXII.

H_E is increasonable, who is displeased at Events, which happen from natural Necessity.

The following FRAGMENTS are omitted by Mr. UPTON: but as they stand under the Name of Arrian, and seem to be in the Spirit of Epictetus, they are added here.

I.

(a) WHAT does it fignify to me, fays he, whether the Universe is composed of Atoms or (b) uncompounded Substances, or of Fire and Earth? Is it not fufficient to know the Essence of Good and Evil, and the proper Bounds of the Desires and Aversions; and, besides those, of the active Powers; and by the making use of these as so many certain Rules, to order the Conduct of Life, and bid these Things, which are above us, farewell: which, perhaps, are incomprehensible to human Understanding: but, if one should suppose them ever so comprehensible, still, what is the Benefit of them, when comprehensed? And must it not be said, that He gives himself Trouble to no Purpose, who allots these Things as necessary to the Character of a Philosopher.—"What then, is the Desphic Admonition, Know Thysiff, supershous?"—"No, surely, says he."——"What then doth it mean?" If any one should admonish a

⁽a) Steb. de Diis & Physiol. Serm. 211. p. 714. Ed. Francof. 1581.

⁽δ) I have translated αμέρρον as it flands in the Text; but, poliibly, it might originally be no more than a marginal Interpretation of ατομούς, changing the Pull Point into a Comma; or, according to Gdper's Translation, a Cerruption of εμοιομέρμον.

Performer

Performer

Performer in a Chorus to know bimfelf, would not be attend to it as a Direction about his (c) Motions —

H.

(d) THE fame Person being asked, Wherein the Diligent have the Advantage of the Slothful? answered, Wherein the Pious have the Advantage of the Impious; in good Hopes.

IH.

(e) WALLS give to Cities, and Cultivation of the Underftanding to Minds, Ornament and Security.

IV.

(f) When a young Man was giving himself Airs in a public Place; and saying, that he was grown wife, by conversing with many wife Men; I have conversed too, answered somebody, with many rich Men, but I am not grown rich.

v.

(g) Socrates, being fent for by (b) Archelaus, as defigning to make him a rich Man, returned him this Answer: Four Quarts of Meal are fold at Athens for five Farthings. "and ⁽c) The Sentence feems imperfect.

⁽d) Maximus, тер фідотогіаз. Serm. 118. p. 374.

⁽e) Ant. & Max. de disciplina, Serm. 210. p. 704.

⁽f) Ibid.

⁽g) Stabæus, Compar. Paupertatis & Divitiarum. Serm. 237. p. 778.

⁽b) Archelaus, the Philosopher, was the Master of Socrates: but the Person here mentioned was King of Macedon, who vainly endeavoured

"and the Fountains run with Water. If what I have is not fufficient for me, yet I am fufficiently able to make a fhift with that; and thus it becomes fufficient for me. Do not you perceive, that it makes no Difference in the Goodness of Polus [the Player's] Voice, whether he performs the Part of Oedipus in his regal State, or when he is a Wanderer, and a Beggar at Colonus? And shall a brave Man appear worse than Polus, and not perform well in whatever Personage is imposed upon him by the Deity? Shall he not imitate Ulysses, who made no worse Figure in Rags than in a fine purple Robe?"

VI.

THERE are fome Perfons who are calmly of a high Spirit, and do all the fame Things quietly, and as it were without Anger, which those do who are hurried with strong Passion. We are to guard, therefore, against the Faults of such Perfons, as being much worse than that of violent Anger. For People of the latter Character are quickly satiated with Vengeance; whereas the others extend it to a longer Time, like Perfons in a slow Fever.

to get Socrates to his Court. The Envy of Ariftophanes upon this Occafion is faid to have produced that infamous Piece of Scurrility and Buffoonery his Comedy of the Clouds. See Bayle, in the Article Archelaus.

⁽i) Stobæus. Quod Eventus, &cc. p. 324. 329.

INDEX.

ACADEMICS, deny the Evidence of the Senfes, B. II. c. xx.

Adultery reproved, II. iv. §. 1, 2.

Affection, not inconfiftent with Reason, I. xi. § .2.——how to be regulated, III. xxiv. § .4.——when miscalled, Id.
Agrippinus. His Behaviour about his Trial, I. i. § .8.—His Answer

Agrippinus. His Behaviour about his Trial, I. i. §. 8.——His Anfwe to Florus, I. ii. §. 3.

Anger reproved, II. xviii. §. 3.

Appearances to the Mind, a right Use of them in our own Power, I. i. §. 2.

the Standard of Action, I. xxviii. §. 2.

Archedemus, II. iv. §. 2. xvii. §. 4. xix. §. 1. III. ii. §. 5. Attention recommended, IV. xiis

в.

Beauty, Human, confifts in human Excellence, B. III. c. i. §. 1.——in the rational Part, Id. §. 3.

Body, dependent on Externals, I. i. §, 2. III. xxii. §, 5. IV. i. §, 11, 12. 14.—Clay, I. i. §, 3. III. xxii. §, 5. IV. i. §, 12.— our laft Garment, I. xxv. §, 3.——compared to an Afs, IV. i. §, 11.

\mathbf{c}

Caution conflitent with Courage, B. II. c. i. §. 1, &c.—neceffary in Things dependent on Choice. II. i. §. 4.

Character to be preserved, I. ii. §. 3. 7. II. ii. §. 3.

Choice uncontroulable by Jupiter himfelf, I. i. §. 6.—incapable of Reftraint, I. xvii. §. 2. xxii. §. 2. III. xix. §. 1.—in our own Power, II. v. §. 1.—is Virtue and Vice; Happiness and Unhappiness, II. xxiii. §. 1, 2.

Chrysippus, I. iv. Note (b). II. vi. §. 2. xvii. §. 3. xix. §. 1. III. ii. §. 5. xxi. §. 1. why useful, I. iv. §. 5. xvii. §. 2. Cleanthes.

INDEX

Clediffer, HI. xxvi. Note (c). IV. i. §. 19. Complaifance to be conducted with Caution, III. xvi. 5. 1. IV. ii. Common Sense what, III. vi. 6.3. Company a Festival, I. xii. §. 2. IV. iv. §. 3. Conceit reproved, II. xi. §. 1. xvii. §. 1. 4. III. ii. §. 4. xiv. §. 4. Contentment recommended, I. i. §. 5. ix. §. 4. IV. iv. §. 6. vii. §. 3. Crates, III. xxii. Note (u). D. . Death to be encountered chearfully, B. I. c.i. §.6.—a Restitution of what is not our own, I. i. §. 9 .- no Evil, I. ix. §. 3. xxiv. §. 1. xxvii. 9. 1. 111. viii. 6. 1. x. §. 2.—a Vizard, II. i. §. 3.—a Return to the Elements, III. xiii. §. 1. IV. vii. §. 3. - only the Separation of Soul and Body, III. xxii. § 4.—a Lots of personal Existence, III. xxiv. § 5.—not terrible, Ench. c. v.—to be placed continually before our Eyes, ENCH. c. xxi. Demetrius, his Speech to Nero, I. xxv. §. 3. Defires in our own Power, I. i. §. 3. II. ii. §. 1. ENCH. c. i .- are to be suppressed by a Beginner in Philosophy, I. iv. §. 1. III. xiii. §. 3. xxii. §. 2. IV. iv. §. 2, 3. Ench. c. ii. Determinations not all to be kept, II. xv. Difficulties their Use, I. xxiv. § 1. Diffidence, faulty, reproved, III. xiv. §. 4.
Diogenes taken for a Spy. I. xxiv. Note (c). III. xxii. §. 3.——his Answer to one who defired recommendatory Letters, II. iii. §. r. taken by Pirates, II. xiii. Note (c). his Behaviour in a Fever, III. xxii. §. 6. his Quickness in Repartee, III. xxii. §. 12. his Benevolence, III. xxiv. §.4.—his Notion of Freedom, III. xxiv. §. 4. IV. i. §. 6. 13. 17. Discontent reproved, I. vi. §. 6. xii. §. 2. II. xvi. §. 2. IV. i. §. 12. iv. §. 3. FRAG, xii. Discourse, indecent, to be avoided, Ench. xxxiii. Distrust in Providence reproved, I. ix. §. 2. III. xxvi. §. 1. Divination, ill Effects of an unreasonable Regard to it, II. vii. §. 1. The proper Disposition in applying to it, Id. S. ENCH.'c. xxxii. Duty, filial, recommended, III. vii. §. 3. ENCH. c. XXX.

Education, why necessary, B. I. c. ii. §. 2. — in what it consists, II. xxii. §. 2. IV. v. §. 1. — what the Stoics meant by it, II. i. Note (b).

Egotifm to be avoided, Encil. c. xxxiii.

Ttt 2

INDEX.

Elecution the Gift of God, II. xxiii. §. 1.——useful, but not principally so, II. xxiii. §. 2.

Envy reproved, III. ii. §. 4. 6.

Epaphroditus, I. i. §. 5. I. xix. §. 3. I. xxvi. §. 2.

Epicurus placed the Good of Man in Body, I. xx. xxiii, §, 1. III. vii. §, 1. — forbad Marriage, and the Care of Children, and engaging in the Service of the Public, I. xxiii. §, 1. III. vii. §, 2. — denied the natural Relation of Mankind to each other, II. xxx. §, 2. — the Irreligion and Injuffice, II. xxx. §, 4. — did not pronounce Stealing to be evil, III. vii. §, 1. — his Principles wicked, pernicious, and lead to Opprefiion, Adultery, and Murder, III. vii. §, 1. 2.

Error, all, involuntary, I. xvii. §. 2. xviii. §. 1. II. xxvi. §. 1. Ench. c. xlii.

Evil confifts in a bad Choice, II. i. §. 1.——a mere Negation, ENCH. c. xxvii.

Euphrates, the Philosopher, III. xv. 6. 1. IV. viii. 6. 4.

Extracts not in our own Power, I. xxii. §. 2. II. v. §. 1, &c.—

Materials to the Faculty of Choice, I. xxix. §. 1.—not to be treated carelessy; II. v. §. 2.

F.

Fancy, the Guide of Madmen, B. I. c. xxviii. §. v.

Fates, I. xii. §. 2. Florus, I. ii. §. 3.

Friendship to be met with only in Prudence and Virtue, II. xxii. §. 1. 4. Frac. x.——impossible in a bad Man, II. xxii. §. 3. 5.

G.

Galba, B. III. c. xvii.

Galileans, IV. vii. §. 2. Note (a).

Galicani, IV. vii. § 2. Note (a):

6 O D the univerfal Father and Creator, I. iii. § 1. ix. § 1. II. viii. § 3.—is omniprefant and omnificient, I. xiv. § 1, 2. II. xiv. § 2. doth not neglect the finalleft Things, III. xxiv. § 6.—our Faculties and Abilities his Gift, I. vii. § 6. II. xxiii. § 1.—wherein confifts His Essence, II. viii. § 1.—makes Revelations to Mankind, III. ; 7.—the Author of all we enjoy, I. xvi. § 3. II. xxiii. § 1. IV. i. § 12.—Dependence on Him recommended, II. xix. § 3.—To be thanked for the Instructions we receive from wise and good Men, I. iv. § 5.—for moral Improvement, II. xviii. § 3.—proposed to our Imitation. See Institution.—made all Men to be happy, and hath put Happiness in our own Power, I. xxix. § 1. III. xxiv. § 1.—to be consulted in our Undertakings, III. xxii. § 6.

INDEX.

God. See Jupiter.

Gods, different Opinions concerning them, I. xii. §. 1.

Good to be fought from ourfelves, I. xxix, §, 1. III. xxii, §, 5, — the univerfal Motive of Action. III. iii, §, 2, — in our own Power, I. xxix, §, 6, III, iii, §, 2, — confirst in Choice, I. xxxx. II. xvi. §, 1. xxiii, §, 2. III. x, §, 2, — not in Externals, III. xx. §, 1. xxiii, §, 2.

Grief. Rebellion against God, III. xxiv. 6. 1.

H.

Health. Not a Good, B. III. c. x. §. 2. xx. §. 1. Helvidius Prifeus, I. ii. §. 4, 5. Herms, (Rod of) III. xx. §. 1. Hippocrates, I. viii. §. 1. Hippocrates, I. viii. §. 1. Hippocrates, I. viii. §. 1.

I.

Imitation of God, B. II. c. xiv. §. 2. xvi. §. 4. ——of good Men, II. xvii. §. 4. 5. xix. §. 3. III. xxiv. §. 1. Ench. c. xxxiii. Improvement, in what to be fought, I. iv. §. 3. 4. III. vi. §. 1. Indulty, wherein it conflits, IV. iv. §. 5. Italicus, III. viii. §. 3. Jupiter, I. i. §. 3. 4. o. xii. §. 2. See GOD.

L

Lateranus, Plautius, B. I. c. 1. §. 5.
Laugbter reproved, Encyl. c. xxxiii.
Laugbter reproved, Encyl. c. xxxiii.
Law (divine) What, II. xvi. §. 3. III. xi. §. 1. xxiv. §. 2.
Letbius, III. xx.
Life a Thing indifferent, II. vi. §. 1.
Logic, its Ufe, I. vii. I. xvii. §. 1.
Love, confiftent only with Prudence, II. xxii. §. 1.

Νī.

Man, a Spectator and Interpreter of the Works of God, B. I. c. vi. §, 4,— not made for an inactive Life, I. x. §, 2,——his Good confifts in a due Regulation of the Choice, I. viii. §, 2,—xxv. §, 1,—is pofferfied of free Will, I. xvii. §, 2.—xix, §, 2.—Part of a Commonwealth, II.
v. §, 4,—x. §, 1.—IV. viii. §, 2.—how preferved and how dethayed,
II. ix. §, 2.—his End to follow God, I. xxx.—formed to change his

IX No D Ex X

his Abode, III. xxiv. §. 1.—his Nature gentle, fociable, and faithful IV. i. §. 13. v. §. 2. Man not the Mafter of Man, IV. i. §. 12.

Mairing inconfiltent with the Cynic Profession, III. xxii. §. 8.

recommended, III. vii. §. 3. xxi. §. 1.

Maler, who, I. xxiv. §. 9. II. ii. §. 4. Ench. c. xiv.

Maximus; III. vii. §. 1.

Money, not a Good, II. xvi. §. 1.

Providence of the North North State of the Neatness recommended, B. IH. c. i. §. 7. IV. xi. § 1. 3. Nero, I. i. §. 5. ii. §. 3.

o.

Oftentation reproved, B.III. c. xii. §. 1. 5. xiv. §. 2. xxiii. §. 1, 2. xxiv. §. 7. Ench. c. xlvi. xlvii.

P.

Patience the Gift of God, B. I. c. vi. §, 3. II. xvi. §, 2. III. viii. §, 2. Philophers what they ought to study, I. i. §, 6. xx. §, 1. II. xiv. §, 2. III. x §, 2.—how treated, II. xii. §, 2. III. viii. §, 3. ENCH. c. xxii.

Plato, I. viii. § 1. II. xvii. § 1, 2.—directs Prayer, II. xviii. § 4.
—his Notion of a Community of Wives, Fra.G. xlviii.

Pleafure not a Good, II. xi. § 3.—an Attendant on Virtue, III. vii.

§. 3. Polemo, III. i. Note (c).

Poverty not an Evil, III. xvii. S. z. IV. vi. §. 1.

Prayer recommended, II. xviii. §. 4, 5. III. xxi. §. 1.

Principles not dependent on Externals, I. xi. § 3.—the supreme Rule of Action, I. xviii. § 1. III. ix. § 1.

Procrastination reproved. ENCH. C. 1.

Providence, Instances of its Wissom and Goodness, I. vi. §. 1, 2, 3.

Those Instances Proofs of a God, Id.—Gives the best Things to the best Men, III. xvii. §. 1.

Pseudomenos, II. xvii. Note (d).

Pyrrho, I. xxvii. Note (a).

Pyrrhonists ridiculed, I. xxvii. §. 2.

Quarrelling reproved, B. IV. c.v. §. 1, 2,

INDEX

R. T. Tax T.I ghode on

Reason equal in Gods and Men, B. I. c. xii. § contemplates itself, I. xx. § 1.— appointed to a proper Use of the Appearances of Things, I. xx. § 1.

Refignation recommended, I. i. § 5. II. xvi. §. 3. IV. i. §. 12. Revenge reproved, II. x. §. 5.

Riches not a Good, FRAG. xvi. xviii.

Rufus, I. ix. §. 8. III. vi. §. 4. xvii. xxiii. §. 1.— his Answer to Thrafeas, I. i. §. 7.— to Epistetus, I. vii. §. 4.

s.

Self-Interest the universal Motive of Action, B. I. c. xix. §. 2.—natural, I. xxii. §. 3.—II. xxii. §. 1.—the Ground of Piety, I. xxvii. §. 1. II. xxii. §. 2. Ench. c. xxxi.

Seeptics ridiculed, 1. xxvii. §. 2.

Servants. Humanity to them, FRAG. XXX.

Shame, (falle) reproved; III. xxiv. §. 7. xxvi. §. 1.

Sickness not an Evil, III. xx. §. 1. its Use, III. xx. §. 1.

no Impediment to the Mind, Ench. c. ix. Socrates, his Refignation to the divine Will, I. iv. §. 4 .-- a Citizen of the World, I. ix. §. 1 .-- his Speech to his Judges, I. ix. §. 5. III. i. §. 4. xxiii. §. 1. began by the Examination of Words, I. xvii. §. 1. always preferred the fame Countenance, I, xxv. §. 4. forbids an unexamined Life, I. xxvi. § 3. III. xii. §. 4. - his Excuse of the Jailor, I. xxix. §. 10. --- whether he writ any thing, II. i. Note (f). - his Pleasantry at his Trial, II. v. Note (c). - wrote Hymns in Prison, II. vi. §. 2 .- made his Opponent bear witness to him, II. xii. §. 2. xxvi. §. 2. his Chaftity, II. xviii. §. 4. never provoked in a Dispute, II. xii. s. ii. never quarrelled, nor fuffered others to quarrel, IV. v. §. 1. - Author of Confutation, III. xiv. §. 4. his Modesty, III. xxiii. §. 1. IV. viii. §. 5. his Neatness, IV. xi. §. 3 .- his Courage, IV. r. §. 18 .- in what manner he loved his Children, III. xxiv. §. 4. IV. i. §. 18. disobeyed the thirty Tyrants, IV. i. §. 18. his Answer about his Burial, I. xxix. Note (b). when advised to prepare for his Trial, II. ii. 6, 1, ----- to Crito, IV. i. 6, 18.

Solicitude the Effect of Ignorance, II. xiii. §.i. xvi. §. 1.

Solitude a State of Repose and Freedom, I. xii. §. ii. IV. iv. §. 3.—— to be rendered agreeable by Centemplation, and Dependence on God,

III. xiii. §. 1.

INDEX.

Soul, a Portion of the divine Effence, I. xiv. §. I. xvii. §. 2. II. viii. §. 2.—never willingly deprived of Truth, I. xxviii. §. I. II. xxii. §. 5.5.

Spartans, I. ii. §. 1.
Superfluities to be avoided, Ench. c. xxxiii. xxxix. Frag. xxi. xxv. xxix.

Sura, III. xvii. Note (d).

T.

Thankfiving recommended, B.I. c.i. §. 3. iv. §. 5. xii. §. 1. xvi. §. 3. II. xxiii. §. 1. III. v. §. 1. IV. iv. §. 1. vii. §. 2. Thrafas, I. i. §. 2.

V.

Vanity reproved, Ench. c. vi. kliv. klix. Frag. kiii. Velpafian, I. ii. §. 4.

Vulgar to be avoided, III. xvi. §. 2. Ench. c. xxxiii. — Difference between them and a Philosopher. Ench. c. xlviii.

Women, for what to be esteemed, Ench. xl.

World, a System composed of Men and God, I. ix. §. 1.—one great City, III. xxiv. §. 1. 3.—hath a Governor, II. xiv. §. 4. Worship, (divine) recommended, III. vii. §. 3. IV. iv. §. 6. Ench. C. xxxi.

z.

Zeno, I. xx. Note (a). B. II. c. xiii. §. 2. IV. viii. §. 2.

HE learned Dr. TAYLOR, Editor of Lysias and Demosphenes, having honoured me with his Opinion, concerning some Passages, about which he was consulted, I am enabled by his Observations to make the following Improvements to this Work.

Page 37. Add to Note (b)—It feems probable, that a great deal is wanting; and that ori $ar S p w \pi i r a$ belongs to one Story, and π_i our, $\varepsilon \phi r$, to another.

P. 77. But how then came any fuch Suspicions..... Perhaps the Sense is, Whence arise our Suspicions, Jealouses, and Fears, concerning our Children, if we have no natural Affection towards them?

P. 101. Add to Note (d) --- Or, perhaps, smador should be smades.

P. 117. This your Victory, this your Conclusion Perhaps Victory and Conclusion 4 hould change Places.

P. 144. To Note (b) add—But, as διαπλλω occurs not elfewhere, and reading it here will make an improper Repetition of nearly the fame Senfe, and διαΞτικαι τινα fignifies, to do fomething to another, L. 4. c. 7. p. 628. edit. LPt. and in Lyftas, Apol. in Sim. p. 79. contra Agarat. p. 235, it will be beft to preferve the prefent Reading, and to translate it—What doth he lofe, who makes him fuch?

P. 171. To Note (i) add — Prov. viii, 34. and Ecclus. xiv. 23. speak of waiting and bearkening at the Doors of Wildow. Yet the Passage, to which Mr. Upton refers, p. 577, of his Edition, and p. 368. of this Translation, favours the received Reading.

Uuu

P. 172. To Note (1) add — Probably here is an Allulion to the Proverb, cited by Wolfius, επι βυροπ καρεξεδαι, of which fee Suidas.

P. 184. To Note (c) add — Yet possibly the Sense of outser may be couched under as s.

P. 239. To Note (b) add—But a much better, and almost certain Conjecture is, to read απαλλατίομενες instead of πλατίομενες. And then the Translation will be—Concerning those, who return, or, were returning home, on account of Sickness.

P. 254. To Note (b) add—But, on farther Confideration, the Sense of returning or departing, which are λυω hath, Luke xii. 36. Phil. i. 23. and are λυωσ, 2 Tim. iv. 6. seems proper here: and the Translation may be—You go to the Theatre, or thence to some other Place. For Persons often move from one Place to another, merely because they are amused in none.

P. 2.58. To Note (f) add—But probably it should be changed into πεθευ, and the Translation be—What Occasion for Anger, for Defirme Alteration seems needful in Porphyr. de Ablf. L. I. 8. 2.

P. 261. To Note (e) add—He is sensible however, that anatogous is not exactly to throw one's self on one Side; and stands condemned by Phrynicus, as a low Expression.

P. 277. To Note (a) add—Or we may suppose amarny to be a Gloss, or a casual Repetition of the same Word occurring in the Line before: and so translate, there exists the Knowlege, &cc.

P. 306. To Note (d) add --- Or, perhaps, rather the former outes should be left out.

P. 216. To Note (b) add—Yet, possibly, the present Reading may stand, and be translated, But your Life is a perpetual Magistracy.

P. 338. To Note (ε) add—Or τυ φιλοσοφυ may mean, Of the philo-fephic Principle.

P. 343. To Note (b) add—Or the latter οπου Sελω may be a Reperition of the Transcriber.

P. 364. To Note (d) add—For ολων I have taken the Reading of Mr. Upton's Copy, αλλων.

For Archidamas read Archidamus.

P. 371. To Note (b) add — Yet I would not infert a Negative unneceffairly.

P. 374. Note (c). For, rub themselves with, put, throw on their Antagonists.

P. 384. To Note (ε) add—Perhaps also what follows, and particularly ωθε προβατον, is corrupt.

P. 388. To Note (a) add—But this Omiflion was probably owing to the Transcribers slipping from µa3sur to the like Word µax3sur. Poffibly, instead of leaving out zeu, we should rather slippose, that something before it is left out. And in all Likelihood the true Translation of you work axra, instead of slowed not you, &cc. is the following: Is not this, i.e. undertaking to convince others instead of yourself, inverting the Order of Things?

P. 417. The Notes (b) and (i) should change Places.

P. 420. Add to Note (a)—Or rather, after the next Word: and the Translation should be, Tet new, evithout being sinssible of it, you do simething like this, even in the present Case. Consider your Body, &c. But still the Separation of our from Kast you is somewhat unnatural, and takes off from the Spirit and Quickness of the Repartee.

P. 421. Squalid The original Word fignifies, in general, pale. And, probably, Arifophanes meant the Paleness, which proceeds from a fedentary studious Life. But Epistetus plainly understood him, of that unwholesome Look, which Want of Cleanliness gives.

P. 424. To Note (a) add—Or, as Cafaubon conjectures, απωθείν. Or, perhaps, as Mr. Upton proposes, υπερτίθεμενον should be υπερτίθεμενος.

P. 425. Is he my Confcience Κριμα fignifies, p. 652. l. 6. and p. 660. l. 5. of Mr. Upton's Edition, the Judgment, which any one paffes in his own Mind.

P. 443. To Note (b) add—For nothing appears, to support 6 great an Encomium of that Philosopher: whereas Herculer and Diagenes were U u u 2 Favourites Favourites of the Stoics, and particularly of our Author; and the latter profeffed himfelf an Imitator of the former. But then he was never defined. And therefore may we not put in his ftead, Διορυσος, Bacchus? They are joined by the Ancients. See Qy. Curr. L. VIII. c. 5. and Hev. Epifs. II. i. 5, 10. And they will ftand here in their proper Order. But this may be thought too licentious a Change. And, to fay nothing of Hercules, Bacchus was by no means remarkable for Abtlemioufiness.

P. 454. To Note (u) add—This Reading he hath taken from an Edition in 1554, faid to be made from a better Manuscript than the common Editions. He understands it to mean, freuch and affected over-firingly by Externals. Δια, Θεβλυμενού means, averse from, L. II. c. 26. in the beginning, and Philostrat. vit. Apollon. VIII. 7. 3. But from the vulgar Sense, calumniated, it may mean here, one to whom Externals have been misrepresented, who hath a Misconception of the World.

P. 469. And Vice, by Money..... Perhaps for η κακία should be read ευτυχία, a Turn of good Fortune,

